Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Doe Bay General Store and Post Office stands on its original site at the eastern terminus of the County Road near Doe Bay on Orcas Island. Built in 1908, the store is perched on a 30 foot high rock bluff overlooking Rosario Straight to the south and east and fronted by the roadway to the west.

A single story wood frame structure, the Doe Bay General Store is rectangular in plan, measuring 42 by 54 feet, supported with posts and beams that rest on the large rock outcropping that drops away to the east. The dual pitch gable roof is set behind a false or "Western Front" parapet wall which now displays the store name. A full width sheltered porch provides access to what was once the post office on the north bay (10 by 42 feet), the store in the center bay (34 by 42 feet), and a tavern on the south bay (ten by 42 feet). Each of these bays is entered through a separate paneled door with upper-half windows divided into four lights. Two large four-light windows bracket the store entry and a small four-light window is at each end of the porch by the side entries. Four six-light fixed windows are grouped on the south (tavern) elevation. The building is clad with a combination of horizontal one by eight channel groove shiplap on the front elevation and four inch clapboard on the sides. The only alterations to the store are two bathrooms that have been added in the southwest corner and some interior wall materials. The original one by six beaded ceiling paneling and brick chimney centered on the east wall remain in place.

The large addition to the east of the store was built in 1936 as a dance hall and tavern overlooking the sheltered bay. Oriented perpendicular to the store, the north-south gable roof of the addition spans a two story 30 by 42 foot plan. Originally, only the upper level was enclosed, supported over the rocks by 12 inch round wood columns every six feet. In recent years, the lower level was also enclosed and is now used as a guest kitchen and dining area. The walls of the original upper level hall are clad with original cedar shingles.

The interior of the dance hall is lighted by three foot high, six light fixed windows grouped in bands of seven on the north and south elevations and 18 on the east. The space is clear-spanned with rafters tied together every four feet by exposed rough fir three-by-sixes. The interior wall surface is vertical one by eight inch vee-joint cedar siding. The northwest corner of the plan is occupied by a 12 by 25 foot kitchen and serving area. Spaced around the remaining perimeter are 12 of the original wood slatted booths. The room is accessed from the rear of the store and through an exterior doorway on the southwest. The only alterations are modern ceiling material, four small skylights, a wood stove in the southeast corner, and the enclosed lower level, which does not significantly detract from the integrity of the dance hall. An adjacent shed, sided with horizontal drop siding, with a single leaf door and a fixed six light window, is contemporary with the store and is included in the nomination. (Several small frame cottages are located near the Doe Bay General Store and are used as guest quarters for visiters to Doe Bay resort. The cottages are not historically significant and are not included in the nomination.)

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Doe Bay General Store and Post Office, built in 1908, is representative of a turnof-the-century, rural commercial establishment which served the needs of the surrounding agricultural community. One of the few remaining unaltered examples of "false front" architecture in San Juan County, the store is closely associated with the development of agricultural trade and commerce in the isolated Doe Bay area. The attached tavern and dance hall, built in 1936, reflects the beginnings of a later phase of the region's economy, when tourism and recreational activity revived the failing agricultural economy of this island community.

In 1881, John G. Viereck, Doe Bay's first homesteader, contracted to carry mail from Eastsound three times a week, a rigorous 24 mile round trip by horse. The post office was in the Viereck home. Chagrined by the fact that Doe Bay, although the most isolated community on Orcas Island, was closest to the mainland shipping port of Bellingham, Viereck and his sons began rowing out to intercept the mailboat on its run from Bellingham to Eastsound and sorting out the Doe Bay mail on the spot. As a result, in 1894, Doe Bay became an official mail stop though the ship-to-shore connection remained via row boat. This was remedied in 1904 when the Viereck sons, together with community labor, constructed the first permanent dock, a precarious affair projecting off the rocks 20 feet above the water.

During the first decade of the new century, the population of Doe Bay grew significantly due to lucrative market returns from farming the rich land. It was apparent that the port should provide more services, so in 1908 another collaborative effort on the part of the community and the Viereck sons resulted in the building of the Doe Bay General Store and Post Office near the dock. The Viereck sons (who had been deeded the land with the passing of John G. Viereck in 1899) ran the store and Barnhart Viereck served as postmaster. In 1913, the Townend family bought the store and adjoining property, but Barnhart Viereck continued as postmaster until 1918, when his sister-in-law, Elizabeth, took over.

During the teens, eastern Washington orchard development dealt a death blow to the San Juan agricultural economy and Doe Bay, among other island communities, declined in population. However, Doe Bay remained an active port. Steamer cargo was replaced by passengers who had discovered Doe Bay and nearby Point Lawrence as prime camping and fishing spots. Mrs. Townend, who had lost he husband, married William Boyer in the early 1920's. Boyer was an enterprising man and recognized the potential of recreational development. By 1935, two large fishing resorts had been built at Point Lawrence and Boyer purchased additional land to develop the Twin Cedars resort at Doe Bay near the store. As part of the development, the tavern-dance hall was added to the store, poised dramatically above the water behind the store. The tavern was the center of night life for the resorts, which had dining halls but no entertainment facilities. (The Twin Cedar cabins survive, but are altered.) The dock received and the store distributed the necessary supplies to support these activities, and continued to serve the few subsistence farms that remained until the 1950's.

The post office and tavern/dance hall operations were discontinued about 1954, but the general store continued to function minimally until 1975. A succession of owners committed to maintaining the low key atmosphere inherent in these structures has resulted in the retention of this special San Juan Islands landmark which was central to the economic well being of the community from 1908 until the 1930's and beyond. (Although the dance hall and tavern addition was constructed in 1936, it reflects an important development in the history of Doe Bay and the store, illustrating the changing economy of the area. As such, it forms an integral part of the commercial significance of the store property and is a contributing element in the nomination.)
