ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (Describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within the community.)

The Hornbine School is an archetypical example of a 19th century eight grade one-room schoolhouse. It is a modest one-story wood frame clapboard building with entrance in the three-bay gable end facing the street and a stove chimney at the opposite end. This schoolhouse was built at its present location in 1862 in the Hornbine section of southeastern Rehoboth and stands as the best preserved example of a mid 19th century schoolhouse in the town.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE (Explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community.)

One of the fifteen one-room district schools in town during the 19th and early 20th centuries, the Hornbine School was known as District #10 School until districts were abolished in 1883. Beginning in the 1920s, the district schools began to close as st'dents consolidated in larger facilities. The Hornbine School, discontinued in 1937, was the last to close. During the 1930s, Hornbine had a pupil exchange arrangement with Swansea, Hornbine taking lower grades, and Swansea high school pupils.

The Hornbine School was (subsequently) sold, modified for use as a residence, then later deteriorated from disuse. In 1968, when Rehoboth celebrated its 325th Anniversary, the Hornbine School Association was organized to purchase the school, restore it and turn it over to the town as a museum. Formal preservation of the one-room school heritage of Rehoboth reflects the sentiments of a town which had, from first settlement, committed itself to maintaining universal public education.

In addition to its role as a school, its location has significance. The Hornbine School and the earlier Hornbine Baptist Church (#63) face each other across Hornbine Road at a small curving intersection which has changed little since about 1900. There is an intimacy of scale and an interplay between the two buildings which deserves to be preserved.
