Description

The Dundee Masonic Lodge (OH-2) sits within the unincorporated town of Dundee, in Ohio County, Kentucky. Dundee straddles State Route 69, 10 miles northeast of County seat Hartford. The Rough River, a Green River tributary, defines the northern reaches of the town. Ohio County is located within the Western Coal Field, which is part of the larger Pennyrile Cultural Landscape region of Kentucky.

The Masonic Lodge sits on a 78' x 88' parcel, with the narrow side of that rectangular area adjacent to the highway. Other than the Lodge building, no other features are found on the site.

The Masonic Lodge building was constructed in 1892 and stands on the east side of State Route 69, facing west. It is a wood frame structure consisting of 2 main masses. The northern mass, which is seen to the left by a person facing the building's front, is a gabled block with two entrances, each below a double-hung 12/12 window. That block measures 30' x 51', with the shorter side being the front. The Masonic symbol, the letter "G," is seen in the front gable's pediment. This portion of the building has 1530 square feet on each of the two levels, for a total of 3060 square feet.

To the right of that main building mass is a tall bell tower whose front side has a first-floor door, a second-floor 12/12 double-hung window, and a third-floor circular medallion with the 5-point star of the Masonic organization. That portion of the building measures 12' x 13', and is slightly set back from the frontal plane by roughly 2'. This portion of the building has three levels, each with 156 square feet, for a total of 468 square feet.

Banistered double steps lead up to the main entrances. The building is punctured with a regular pattern of doors and windows. The two doors enter the lower floor meeting room and one opens into the stairwell under the steeple. The doors are 36" by 84" and their transoms measure 36" x 18". The north side of the main block has 8 windows, four on each floor, measuring 32" x 84" and with 12/12 double-hung sashes. The same fenestration pattern is seen on the south side, but with six windows instead of eight, the remaining two windows occurring in the bell tower. In the belltower are seven steps on the north side, six on the east and five on the south side on the first floor. The steps are forty inches wide.

On top of the eighty-foot steeple is perched a conspicuous weathervane in the shape of a goat. The object weighs eight pounds, is made of zinc and is five feet long. It was attached to the building in 1902, and has been a local landmark since assuming its summit.

Statement of Significance

The Masonic Lodge No. 733 (OH-2) in Dundee, Ohio County meets the National Register Criterion A and has played an important role in Dundee's social history. The building is significant with the historic context "History of Fraternal Organizations in Ohio County, Kentucky, 1853-1957." The Masonic group has been the leading fraternal organization in Dundee from the time of its lodge's construction in 1892, and continues this status until the present. The lodge has been used by the Masons and other social groups, including Woodmen of the World, Oddfellows, Rebeccas, and the Order of the Eastern Star. In addition to the importance of the building's identity with the Masonic group, the Lodge's large metal weather vane in the shape of a goat, installed in 1902, gave the building a different importance in social history. The goat weather vane, originally a curiosity, has been embraced by the community as having iconic significance. The social significance of this object is not analyzed here within a comparative historic context of local tourist attractions, but is observed in the several ways that the community has responded to the presence of the object. That weathervane led to the town's re-naming, has played a part in local tourism, and has been a subject for arts. The goat has become one of the most curious and familiar landmarks in Ohio County and surrounding counties.

History of Fraternal Organizations in Ohio County, Kentucky, 1853-1957

Martin writes that social organizations are important to reinforce the individual's sense of personal identity and to validate his or her status in the community. These organizations effect a certain social control over the individual; however, individuals are afforded a certain amount of self expression by choosing to join one group over another. In Kentucky, a rural state with limited ethnic diversity, fraternal organizations were the primary secular social group available to men (Martin: 216). Masonic Lodge No. 733 is significant insofar as it helps us to understand the vital role that such civic groups played the cultural life of Dundee. Construction of the Masonic Lodge in 1892 signified that the community had reached a critical mass of viability.

Martin's observation is borne out in Ohio County, as almost every town had some Fraternal Lodge by the 20th century's second decade. The short survey of these organizations on the following page shows that they came into being at a time when Americans had increasing wealth and greater amounts of free time. With additional time and money, people sought new social interactions and entertainments. The relatively large number of these organizations for a relatively rural county indicates their importance as a component of an emerging local social landscape. Nearly a century later, in the late-20th and early-21st century, when American social activities and entertainments shift from collective activities outside the home to more individual home-based activities, the persistence of these fraternal organizations must be seen as an effort to maintain traditions that continue to have social meaning.

History of Dundee, Kentucky

Ohio County was established December 17, 1798, from the western portion of Hardin County. Its name refers to the waterway which formed its northern border when the county was created. Subsequent subdivisions of the county into smaller counties, has left it landlocked (Kleber 1992: 689).

Hartford, 10 miles southwest of Dundee, emerged early as a locally important city due to its location at the head of navigation of the Rough River, a tributary of the important Green River, an early inland route for Kentucky commerce and transportation. Most of the early towns of Ohio County developed where overland roads and waterways crossed. Grain and saw mills, usually situated along waterways, became important focal points of local agricultural and commercial activity. Current-day Dundee is situated where the road, connecting Hartford with Hardinsburg and Hawesville, two county seat towns to the northeast, crosses Rough River.

Development of the community began by the 1840s. Warren W. Hines came to Ohio County from Woodbury, 24 miles southeast in Butler County, which lies along the Green River. A system of locks on the Green River began to appear in 1841, and lock #4 was in Woodbury (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Green\_River\_%28Kentucky%29). Perhaps seeing the potential for river-supported commerce in Woodbury, Hines came to the spot where Dundee is today, and established a mill along the Rough River. The operation became successful enough so that a community grew up around it, adopting the name Hines Mill. In 1846, the name was given a more official status when Hines became the postmaster of Hines Mill (TIMES-NEWS January 26, 1989, page 12-B, "Lineage Lines.").

By 1860, Hines had sold the mill to his cousins, Simeon and Alfred Hines. Simeon Hines sold his interest to Alfred, who continued to operate it until the 1890s. In addition to the flour mill, Alfred Hines also operated a sawmill, a distillery, a ferry, and owned a mercantile store. Hines performed public roles, such as serving six years as Magistrate, a term as postmaster at Hines Mill, and as a United States census enumerator. He died in 1892; his two-story home still stands (TIMES-NEWS, January 24, 1975 "Lineage Lines").

At about the time of Hines' passing, two other noteworthy events occurred: the Masonic Lodge building was completed and the goat weathervane was shipped to America from its fabricator in Dundee Scotland. The weathervane was one of three sent to the United States from Dundee. The other two weather vanes were sent to Missouri and Kansas, but were lost in fires.

The Dundee goat weathervane was shipped by railroad to Narrows Kentucky, about five miles from Hines Mill. It sat on the front porch of the Fitzhugh Renfrow and Company's general store for several years. In 1902, the goat weathervane was hoisted to its place of honor, atop the 80-foot Masonic Lodge steeple in this Ohio County village. This relocation saved the goat from the fate of the other two which were lost to calamities. On February 7, 1904 a tornado destroyed the F. Renfrow and Company building and most of the rest of Narrows.

Indications of significance of the weathervane to the community

A collective civic response that announces the local regard for the weathervane came in the form of the town's name. Once the Woodmen of the World group ordered the weathervane for their Lodge, the citizens of the community renamed the town after the place of the goat's "birth." Thus, Hines Mill became Dundee Kentucky on January 24, 1898. Today, a sign labeled "Home of the Goat" welcomes visitors to the community.

The placement of the goat atop the building's steeple-like tower apparently did not prevent local church-goers from identifying the building with their religious activity, as it served as the place of worship for a local church for 50 years. Communities in Ohio County frequently have a Methodist or a Baptist Church, or both. The building's form, a rectangular block beside a tower, looked church-like, even before any religious group inhabited it. The building was initially used by secular groups, first by the Woodmen of the World, then by the Dundee Masonic Lodge No. 733, chartered in 1901. After the goat surmounted the structure, the Dundee Methodist Church organized (1902), as did the Dundee Baptist Church (1904). On May 4, 1904 the Dundee Methodist Episcopal Church South purchased the first floor from the trustees of the Dundee Lodge No. 733 for $400. For half a century, the Dundee Methodist Episcopal Church used the first floor until that group built a separate church building across the road from the Masonic Lodge. Once in their new home, the Dundee Methodist Church sold back to the Masonic group the first floor of the lodge for $400.

The image of the goat hovering above town gave rise to behaviors, while not exactly religious, could be linked with the attempt to confront the power of nature. The life-sized goat weathervane, lightweight (10-15 pounds) due to its zinc composition, towers over this small town, and has survived gusty winds, torrential rains, and exposure to temperature extremes. Its tenacity quickly made the goat weathervane a totem of strength, against which area youth could test their own manhood. For years, the object provided target practice to young men, which left the goat riddled with bullet holes. The iron pedestal, too, had deteriorated from rust after years of being on the steeple of the Masonic Lodge Building. Rather than remove the iconic town figure, in 1968 the weathervane was taken down from its steeple and repaired by Amos L. Bean of Bowling Green, Kentucky. Amos Bean had lived next to the Masonic Lodge at Dundee. He reattached the broken horn, filled in the bullet holes and coated the zinc body with fiberglass and paint. The symbol of Dundee was returned to the 80-foot spire above the Masonic Lodge.

The first annual Dundee Community Day, held in 1992, of course was built around the goat. One year's theme was "Kiss the Goat". In 2007, affection for the goat led to creation of a goat-shaped three-acre Corn Maze. "The Dundee Goat, now temporarily celebrated in a corn maze next to the Ohio County town of Dundee on Kentucky 69 North, will help raise money for the Dundee Community Days organization. The group keeps up the lodge that sports the famous Dundee Goat Weather Vane and provides a college scholarship to a local student each year. Steve Bice of Miles Farm Supply designed the maze and goat on his computer and helped advise Ohio County farmer Darren Luttrell as he carved them out with his lawn mower. When it gets closer to Dundee Days, Luttrell will mow a path from the maze to the goat so that people can also walk around it. ‘All the way around the goat is about a mile,’ Luttrell said. ‘That’s a pretty good distance.’ The maze will be the highlight of Dundee Days in August.” (MESSENGER-INQUIRER, July 15, 2007, Page 1A)

The Masonic Lodge with its Goat Weather Vane has inspired creative responses, as well. Gary Adams, in 1989, completed a drawing, with an attached informational article, “The Old Meeting House,” which tourists receive who stop in the Dundee Post Office asking about the Goat. The Bank of Ohio County—formerly the Bank of Dundee, organized in 1922—gives out Adams’ drawing on a promotional pamphlet to announce the town’s identity with the symbol. In the Dundee bank hangs a large watercolor of the building painted in 1988 by Katie Shively, and titled “The Meeting Place.” Well-known Dundee School teacher, Mrs. Calais Coppage, completed an oil painting of the building in 1972. Celebrated Dundee artist Liz Davis fabricated “Tom the Dundee Goat,” a sculptural piece made of cloth, which became part of the Kentucky Women Artist exhibit at the Owensboro Museum of Fine Arts.

Some of the local lore surrounding the building also testifies to a near mythic role it plays. Some local residents claim to be able to predict the weather for three days by watching the goat, noting that it is which always facing the wind. Area farmers have used this information let them plan when to plant or harvest their crops.

Other clear signals show that the goat weathervane is also greatly important to the visitor as it is for the townspeople. On travels through the town, many tourists stop in Dundee purposely, some exclusively, to photograph the “Old Goat,” thus affirming the power of the object to outsiders. On Dundee Community Day, the lower floor of the Masonic Lodge opens to the public as a museum, available to both community resident and visitor. The identity as a museum confirms the identification between the building, its space, and the town’s past. The museum holds the Dundee school trophies and memorabilia of the town’s past in pictures and newspaper clippings.
