8. Significance

Local legend has it that the ranch was often visited by Butch Cassidy and his cohorts.

A short lived venture, Starr Ranch failed probably because of overgrazing. Today, the region's primary economic base is ranching, and the Starr Ranch represents an early effort at this occupation in the south end of the Henry Mountains.

- Of unusual construction for the area, the ranch house, was built of dressed V granite (diorite) and chinked with mud. Much time and care was taken in the construction of the building in relation to its relatively short use span.
  - The smoke house, too, is uniquely built. A dugout, its only visible support is the earthen sides of the structure, and its arched roof. The only wooden posts found in the building are two pole stringers used as meat drying racks.
