Nimrod Ross House

DESCRIPTION

The Nimrod Ross House in the Woods Park neighborhood of Lincoln, Lancaster County, Nebraska is a small, single-story wood-frame cottage with a hip roof and a full-length front porch. The property consists of one contributing building—the house—and a non-contributing garage that was built after the period of significance. The property is related to the Multiple Property Documentation Form entitled "African American Historic and Architectural Resources in Lincoln, Nebraska," exemplifying the property type "dwellings." The frame dwelling was constructed ca.1903. The house is an example of a rare property type in Lincoln, Nebraska and retains sufficient integrity for listing in the aspects of setting, location, overall design, feeling, and association, even though the main exterior material (wooden clapboards) has been hidden beneath asbestos shingle siding.

The Nimrod Ross House at 445 South 30th Street in the Woods Park neighborhood of central Lincoln, Lancaster County, Nebraska, from ca. 1903 to 1917 was the home of Nimrod Ross and his family, members of Lincoln's African American community. Ross and his family exemplified significant trends and achievements in employment and education, as documented in "African American Historic and Architectural Resources in Lincoln, Nebraska," a Multiple Property Documentation Form.

Deeds and directories indicate that the house was constructed around 1903, when Ellen Ross entered into an agreement to purchase the property. Probably the small frame cottage was built by Henry Brueckner, a carpenter who lived nearby and who owned the property from 1895 to 1903. The Nimrod Ross family, including Clinton and Glen, is listed in city directories as occupying the house by 1904 through 1917. Nimrod and Ellen apparently divorced around 1917, as she is later listed as "Ellen Bowie being nee Ellen Ross" and he is identified as married to Priscilla.

The Ross family home is a wooden, single-story building of rectangular plan with a truncated hipped roof. Smooth asbestos shingles cover the walls, which almost certainly were originally clapboard-covered. A full-length porch with four wooden pillars shelters the main, east facade, leading to an off-center entrance flanked by two one-over-one windows. The low porch has no railings; small ornamental brackets at the tops of the pillars are probably later embellishments. The main body of the house has two one-over-one windows on both side (north and south) facades. The east and north windows are framed with simple top moldings, while the south windows have plain frames. There are small, shed-roofed additions at the rear (west) of the house, which also jut further south than the main body of the house. The smooth concrete-block foundation probably is a replacement, either of limestone or of quarry-faced concrete blocks, both of which were in common use in Lincoln around 1903. An inconspicuous basement entrance has been added to the south side of the house, consisting of a concrete stairs in a plain stairwell, set against the south foundation.

A large ash tree looms over the house from the southeast part of the front yard. A gravel driveway extends along the north side of the house, providing access to a small, frame, gable roofed garage behind the house on the north property line. The garage was in place by 1928 but cannot be documented as extant during the Ross family use of the house, and therefore is not counted as a contributing feature of the site. The terrain slopes gently down towards the south in this area, and the long block between J and L Streets is developed with a variety of small houses, mostly frame and mostly of late 19th or early 20th century construction. The rear property line of the houses on the east side of S. 30th is the west edge of Woods Park, a municipal park created in the 1950s from a large open parcel known as the Rogers Tract. The relationship of the houses along 30th Street to the open space of the Park preserves the overall setting extant when the Ross Family occupied the house.

The Ross House retains a high degree of integrity of setting, location, overall design, feeling, and association. Its exterior materials have been altered by addition of asbestos siding and replacement of the foundation, but neither modification obscures the major features of the property. Among the rare property type of residences associated with early African-American residents of Lincoln, the house is relatively unaltered. It is maintained in fine condition and conveys very well an overall feeling from its original construction, which is the beginning of its period of significance.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Nimrod Ross House is significant on the local level under criterion A for its association with broad patterns of employment opportunity for the African American community in Lincoln, as illustrated in the lives of Nimrod Ross and his son Clinton. The Ross House is related to the Multiple Property Documentation Form (MPDF) entitled "African American Historic and Architectural Resources in Lincoln, Nebraska." The period of significance of this property, ca. 1903-1917, overlaps both historic contexts described in that MPDF, entitled "Early Settlement Era including the First Exodus, 1870-1913," and "Institution Building in an Era of Segregation, 1914 - 1941." The Ross House's period of significance began with the house's construction and residency by the Ross family around 1903, and ends with the family moving from the house around 1917.

The house at 445 S. 30th Street in Lincoln, Lancaster County, Nebraska was occupied by the family of Nimrod and Ellen Ross from around 1903 to 1917. This association renders the house significant on the local level under criterion A, as Nimrod Ross and his son Clinton Ross were emblematic of significant patterns in occupational opportunity for African Americans in Lincoln, as described in the Multiple Property Documentation Form (MPDF) entitled "African American Historic and Architectural Resources in Lincoln, Nebraska." The property relates to both historic contexts entitled "Early Settlement Era including the First Exodus, 1870-1913," and "Institution Building in an Era of Segregation, 1914 - 1941."

Nimrod Ross was born into slavery in Tennessee in 1863.¹ (His obituary places his birth at 1844 in Mississippi, and his burial record cites 1865. By his own account he was "just born in slavery" and recalled about it only what he had been told, debunking both the 1844 and 1865 dates.²) He grew up in Missouri then lived for a time in Kansas, before coming to Lincoln around 1900. Ross was one of the first African Americans to serve on the City of Lincoln police force, approximately from 1902-1905, and also served as a "tumkey" at the county jail a few years later.³ The Lincoln Police Department in the 1890s and 1900s consisted of about two dozen men; group portraits of the force included one man of African ancestry in 1895 and one in 1907. Ross is Lincoln's earliest African American policeman who can be identified by name and he may be the stocky, mustached man in the 1907 portrait. Ross recalled in 1938 that "I came to Lincoln over forty years ago when it was just a little burg. But things were a whole lot better for the colored folks then than they are now," recalling his employment as a policeman and at the county jail. This anecdotal report of a narrowing of occupational opportunity was documented by a community-wide study in 1933, and was typical of national trends towards greater segregation and narrower opportunities for African Americans, after the early 20th century. For the rest of Ross's long life in Lincoln, his occupation as listed in the city directories was laborer or janitor, though he cited in his 1938 interview that his final job as "caretaker" was essentially a pension, with few duties.

Despite these obstacles, Nimrod Ross continued to support his family and contribute to his community. The city directories reflect that also residing in the home were Glen L. and Clinton Ross, students at the University in mid-teens. Ross recalled with pride in 1938 that "I was able to give my boy a good education and he [Clinton] was one of the few Negroes to play on the University of Nebraska football team." Upon graduation, Clinton Ross was a lawyer in Lincoln in 1916 and 1917, then served as a 1st Lieutenant in the U. S. Army in 1918, before leaving Lincoln for Los Angeles, where he was still practicing law in the late 1930s. This out-migration from Lincoln of educated and professional-class African Americans was not unusual, and was attributed in studies to both discrimination, and the small size of Lincoln's black population to support professionals.⁵

The whole Ross family apparently left their home at 445 S. 30th St. at about the same time as Clinton left to join the U. S. Army. While Nimrod Ross did not have further opportunity for civil service employment, he continued to contribute to the community as a trustee of his church, Mt. Zion Baptist, including service in the 1920s when the congregation constructed a new church at 12th and F Streets.⁶

He recounted in 1938 that "Church work now takes up most of my spare time." This service extended even beyond his own congregation. Residing in Lincoln's increasingly segregated "north side" neighborhood north of O Street and east of the University, Ross helped lead a "literary club" for youth at Newman Methodist Church in that neighborhood. A long-time Lincoln resident recalls her childhood impressions of Mr. Ross as a tall, well-read, white-haired man who was very involved with children and very encouraging of their educations—"a really good role model."

Nimrod Ross's contribution to Lincoln extended beyond his family's years of residence at 445 S. 30th St., but this nicely maintained small house is the best-preserved historic property closely associated with this individual whose long life illustrates well the themes developed in the MPDF "African American Historic and Architectural Resources in Lincoln, Nebraska" of shifting occupational opportunities, importance of church, and quiet community leadership.
