The College Block Building is a two-story brick commercial building. Its most prominent feature is an elaborate cornice of white painted tin. It is composed of alternating large and small brackets and terminates in massive scroll brackets at each corner. At the center of the cornice and above the brackets appears an ornamented crest with the words "College Block". At the second story level, there are eight windows, four with segmented arches and richly ornamented hoods of pressed tin. The four other windows, the second and third from each end, are coupled under a heavy gabled hood supported by massive brackets.

The upper story of the building is divided into apartments and the ground level into two commercial stores. No major structural changes have been made.

The earliest known commercial building in Iowa City to have been designed by a known architect, Chauncey F. Lovelace, the College Block Building demonstrates a late-nineteenth century appreciation for massive ornamental detail. Although the massive cornice that crowns the second story appears today to be outrageously ornate and impossibly heavy, it shows fearless architecural daring and actually weighs very little as it is made of pressed Since 1883, the College Block Building, so-named due to its location on College Street, has presented an outstanding and unique profile among the few blocks of two-story brick commercial architecture in "downtown" Iowa City.

Although there are several examples of the more simple craftsman style brick architecture remaining in Iowa City, many of the more Victorian ornately decorated buildings are scheduled to come down.

To attest to the building's importance in its own time. Chauncey Lovelace, the only architect working in Iowa City. not only designed this building but chose it as the location for his own office.

The History and description of the College Block Building have been well-documented in a Historic American Buildings Survey Inventory form.

The College Block is in immediate danger due to Urban Renewal.

The earliest known commercial building in Iowa City to have been designed by a known architect, Chauncey F. Lovelace, and one of the first commercial examples of massive pressed tin cornice and ornamentation, the College Block Building survives today as an outstanding representative of the business district of Iowa City in the last quarter of the Nineteenth Century. Since 1878, the College Block Building, so named due to its location on College Street, has presented an outstanding and unique profile among the few blocks of two-story brick commercial architecture in downtown Iowa City.

Chauncey Lovelace is one of a few identifiable Nineteenth Century architects living and working in Iowa City. Until 1880, he was a member of the architectural firm "Finkbine and Lovelace." His partner, Robert Spencer Finkbine, left Iowa City in 1889 to serve as the Superintendent of Construction of the present-day State Capitol building in Des Moines. After 1880, Lovelace continued as an architect in his own business and c. 1895 moved his office into this building.

Contemporary newspaper accounts trace the progress of the College Block Building beginning on 15 August 1878. "The front of Mr. Lovelace's new block will be decidedly handsome and ornate. The windows will be of plate glass and capped with elaborate galvanized iron work, the top of the building to be surmounted with a conspicuous cornice. It is something new, just what the street architecture of this city needs" (Daily State Press). Apparently the writer mistook the pressed tin for the real thing. This reference attests to the new ornamental emphasis which Lovelace employed. On 30 August, the same source noted "Lovelace began the stone work on his cellar yesterday." On 5 September "Lovelace's new building is ready for the brick work, Mr. Ebert put in the foundation and it is a good one" (Ibid.) On 29 September it was reported "Maresh & Holubar are putting up some galvanized iron work on Lovelace's new buildings." This firm was a most noted tin cornice and roofing firm, and served a very broad western market. On 15 October "Lovelace's new buildings have the finest front of any business structure in the city. It is quite a departure in architecture" (Ibid.) Lastly, on 6 November "The facade of Lovelace's new buildings is finished and bears the name of College St. Block" (Ibid.)

At the time of its nomination to the National Register of Historic Places, the building was threatened, indeed doomed to demolition. This parcel and the building upon it gained notoriety when court action forced the local urban renewal process to offer redevelopment parcels to individual investors. The present owner restored the original facade, added apartments on the second floor, and combined the two lower commercial spaces into a most successful restaurant.
