| | Earle Town House is a handsome late Palladian or Georgian |
| | dence. Its park-like grounds, shaded by old trees and en- |
| fron | ed by an ivy-covered grillwork fence, feature the sanded t walk typical of its earlier years, a handsome garden front |
| entr | ance of grillwork and brick, an ivy mound approximately 100 |
| year | s old (built after 1856). One of the trees is a grandiflora |
| magn | olia planted in 1856. A rear garden with fountain is patterned |
| arte | r Edgar Allan Poe's Richmond, Virginia, garden. |
| , Set | 160 feet back from a tree-shaded street, the residence is a |
| | story white frame structure with painted brick foundation. |
| | angular in design, the house is centered by a gracious front |
| | with distinctive glass and woodwork detailing. Rectangular |
| | ows with dark green shutters add to the building's dignified arance. On the second story level above the front door is an |
| | tical smaller window; centered over this is the Palladian |
| wind | ow. Double front steps with a grill railing lead from the |
| | nd to a small front stoop. The present west side piazza is |
| an ei | nlargement of the original one. |
| Outs | tanding interior features include hand-carved mantels, fine |
| | work detail around doors and windows, six-paneled doors, |
| | ed paneled dado, white china doorknobs. The high-ceilinged t room retains the same furnishings given it 150 years ago. |
| , iion, | room recarns the same rurnishings given it iso years ago. |
| | ough not of manorial extent, the house and its grounds are of |
| dist | inctive elegance and graciousness. |

Unusual in date, condition and in situ location for South Carolina's upper Piedmont region, the Earle Town House, with its unique building and grounds, is an architectural, historical and aesthetic asset which historical and architectural groups feel that the city and state can ill afford to lose. Architecturally distinguished example of a late Georgian dwelling -- one of the few extant in upper South Carolina -- the residence is one of two houses within the city remaining from Greenville's earliest history. Nearly all other landmarks of the city's early history have been destroyed.

The Earle House site was originally part of the plantation of the pioneer Earle family. The family came from Virginia shortly after the Revolution and settled in this wooded, Blue Ridge foothills section, which had been deeded to South Carolina by the Cherokee Indians in 1777. Elias T. Earle, whose father was an early member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, was one of the first members of the family in South Carolina, figuring prominently in the history and development of the Greenville area and of the state. He was a state senator from Greenville District, a United States Congressman, a silk grower, a manufacturer, and first Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the U.S. government. One of the earliest ironmongers of the South, he manufactured guns for the War of 1812. He was also a builder of the great wagon road across the Blue Ridge mountains.

Elias took up his Carolina lands as early as 1787 and acquired his homesite in 1796. The deed stated that the site was upon lands on which he was then living. That the home now known as the Earle Town House was built at least by 1810 is indicated by the 1910 birthday celebration marking its 100th anniversary. (This was attended by people living in Greenville today). An 1826 will mentions the house. Born in the house was another leading figure in regional and state development -- Judge and United States Senator Joseph Haynsworth Earle, great-grandson of Elias T.

Special significance attaches to the central-city location of the park-like Earle House site and the character of the total Greenville area. A heavily industrialized city, surrounded by textile mills and mill villages, Greenville is a focal point of the most densely populated area of the state. Aesthetic importance of a park-like area within the city limits increases with the area's continuing industrial expansion.
