Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Towson Academy is a two story brick structure with full basement, faced with a smooth light-colored, marble-like stone veneer. Almost completely devoid of ornamentation, the armory presents a severe appearance on its front (Washington Street) facade, which faces west. Oriented to the west, the front facade reads from south to north corners as follows:

The first floor and basement form a section of seven 2/6 casement windows at first floor level. The southern half of the 14-bay drill hall is visible above the first floor section, its bays punctuated by 2/6 casement windows. The roof over the drill hall is a low-pitched gable.

The center block is a simple screen, containing a shallow entry hall in front of the drill hall. Four narrow 2/3 casement windows at first and second floor levels of the center block flank a high arch over wide double doors. The interior wall of the arch is plastered and painted. Four cement steps lead to a cement slab porch before the doorway. Four short pillars of the same stone as the facade veneer flank the steps, each topped with a trumpet shaped ornament of black metal. Iron railings connect the pillars and surround the porch. The front yard contains a flagpole and is pleasantly landscaped with shrubs and grass.

The building is symmetrical and identical on both sides of the center block.

The north (Chesapeake Avenue) facade features four windows (2/6 casement) in one story sections which flank the two-story entrance to the drill hall. The entry projects substantially from the side sections with double doors recessed slightly and surmounted by a large fanlight. A brief flight of cement steps with walls faced with veneer matching the facade lead to the street. At the extreme northeast corner is a driving ramp at ground level leading into a wide garage door.

The south facade, facing onto an alley, has 11 2/6 casement windows on the first floor. The drill hall wall above presents a blank face.

The rear of the building has been altered considerably with two story additions faced with an unmatched stone veneer.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Applicable Criteria: A, C
Applicable Exceptions: none
Significance Evaluated: state

The Towson, Maryland Academy is primarily significant for its association with the reorganization and expansion of the National Guard system in the twentieth century. It derives additional significance from its role as a social center for its community, a function it has served continuously since its construction date. Architecturally, the building embodies the distinctive characteristics of its type, including a T shaped plan with a two story front "head house" section and a one-story perpendicular "drill hall" extending to the rear; its facade is detailed to recall Medieval fortifications, with towers flanking the central entrance and strip buttresses.

Built in 1933 at a cost of $75,000, the Towson Academy is among the last of the group of armories built in Maryland. It occupies the former site of the Smedley House, a hotel made popular as a summer rendezvous by fashionable Baltimore families around the turn of the century. The post-war building boom which radically changed the character of downtown Towson has caused a shift in scale favoring high-rise office tower development. The Towson Academy, together with the police station opposite (across Washington Street) and the courthouse diagonally opposite on the northwest corner of Washington Street and Chesapeake Avenue, contribute to the diminished nucleus of older buildings in the center of downtown Towson. The structure's simple sturdy lines blend successfully with the rich mix of building styles in the immediate vicinity.

Severe shortage of vehicle storage areas on the armory site and problems of congestion in Towson area in general have no doubt played some part in the facility's diminished usefulness as an armory. While still in some minimal use by the National Guard, the building is mainly utilized by community groups for meetings, and the drill hall is heavily used by young adults for dancing classes.
