This chimney conforms to the general description under property type "Rice Processing Facilities" and property subtype "Rice Mills and Chimneys."

The chimney is approximately 29' high, an average height for this property subtype. It is 6' square at the base, which is 5'6" high above ground level. Two brick courses form the corbeling of the base. The chimney gradually tapers above the base to approximately 3' square at the top. The original corbeling and a portion of the bricks at the top are missing. Two arched openings for the firebox, 1'8" high and 1'8" wide, are located opposite each other at the north and south sides of the base. Vents of two horizontal and two vertical holes each are located near the top of the base on all four sides. Similar vents are located approximately 10' high on the north and south sides of the chimney and approximately 10'6" high on the other two sides of the chimney. (See Figure 1)

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

This rice mill chimney is significant as one of seven known extant rice mill chimneys in Georgetown County and for its association with Nightingale Hall, one of several productive plantations on the Pee Dee River. Robert F.W. Allston, the plantation's most prominent and most successful owner, bought Nightingale Hall for $80,000 from the estate of George A. Moultrie in 1846. In this transaction Allston paid approximately $30,000 for 1200 acres and $500 each for some 100 slaves. Allston bought Waterford, between the Pee Dee and Waccamaw Rivers, in 1847; it adjoined Nightingale Hall and he planted the two plantations as a unit. These plantations were successful in both the quantity and quality of their rice; in 1858 Nightingale Hall produced 18,000 bushels and in 1859 produced 20,000 bushels of rice, which had a reputation for being some of the best rice grown in Georgetown District. Allston preferred living on his plantations to being an absentee owner, however, and considered selling Nightingale Hall and Waterford on several occasions. After Allston's death in the spring of 1864, Nightingale Hall was to be sold and the proceeds divided among his heirs, but the disruption brought about by the emancipation of his slaves postponed its sale for some time. "Your negroes are I hear perfectly insubordinate," Jane Pringle wrote to Allston's widow, Adele Petigru Allston, in April 1865. "The women at N [ightingale] Hall behaved like devils . . . The women turned in and killed the sheep and acted in a frenzied way. . . . The blacks are masters of the situation, this is a conquered country and for the moment law and order are in abeyance." The plantation passed through a succession of owners after 1869, and the present house was constructed c. 1918 after the original house was torn down. Nightingale Hall is now known as Nightingale.(1)
