DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Brick Meeting House is located near the intersection of Maryland Routes 272 and 273 at Calvert, Cecil County, Maryland.

The approximate square foot ground coverage of the Meeting House is 2,200 square feet. The property is approximately 34 acres.

The building consists of three different sections, of which the brick section is the oldest, having been built in 1724. The brickwork is of Flemish bond with a simple watertable. Brick arches exist above the original door and window openings. This earliest section measures 30'3" by 40'2". It had large entrance doors on the east and west walls and a small high door on the north wall above the elder's raised benches which originally ran along the north wall. The east and west walls each had two large windows, one on either side of the entrance doors, and a small window over the door on the west wall. The north wall had two smaller high windows, one on each side of the north door. The appearance of the original south brick wall is unknown. The axis of the roof line runs north-south.

In 1749, the Brick Meeting House burned and was rebuilt and enlarged by 1752. The east, west, and north walls of the 1724 building were virtually undamaged and remain in the present building. Two upper windows were cut in the north wall and the north gable was rebuilt with pent cornice. The south brick wall was demolished and a stone addition was built of the same height and width as the brick section, extending to the south. This stone addition contained two one-story meeting rooms on the ground floor, each with a corner fireplace at the south corners of the building, and a large youth gallery on the second floor looking out into the brick section. Smaller youth galleries ran along the east and west brick walls. The stone section had a double doorway on the south wall with double windows on each side of the door. There was also a window on the east and the west wall of the stone addition. The 1752 Meeting House was roofed with a greenish slate. Fragments of these roofing stones are up to 1/4" thick. There was a ladder on the roof to the chimney at the south gable.

In 1810 the interior of the building was again burned. Two of the 18th century poplar benches without backs were saved and are still in the Meeting House. When the house was rebuilt that same year, the interior orientation was changed, so that the seating faced the west instead of the north, with the elders' gallery along the west wall rather than along the north wall. The corner fireplaces were closed. At this time, the south and west doors were narrowed, the north door was lowered and the east window in the stone section was changed into a door. A stone chimney was added at the north end. The south stone gable was rebuilt and the youth gallery was rebuilt along the north, south and east walls. Sliding panelling was installed so as to separate the brick side which was used by the men from the stone side which was used by the women. The architect and builder for the 1810 rebuilding was Thomas Horton of Willistown, Pennsylvania, assisted by his brother Jesse Horton. The plastering was done by John and William Ray of Wilmington, Delaware. Hardware was carefully salvaged. The heavy timber was obtained from the Meeting House woods and was cut and hewed in one day. All the new benches with backs were made from one large poplar tree donated by Job Haines of Rising Sun.

In the mid-nineteenth century a one story frame A-roof structure measuring 12'4" by 16'4" was added at the Southwest corner of the stone section to serve as a Women's cloakroom and privy. It has a porte-cochere at the west end and a roofed walkway connecting with the south door at the stone end.

In 1901, as part of the celebration of the bicentennial of William Penn's gift of the land for the Meeting House, an overhang was added to the roof at the gables in place of the original verge board, and the interior woodwork and benches were painted and grained.

The original brick walls around the cemetery were removed about 1919. The oldest of these on the north side of the graveyard was Flemish bond with a wood shingle roof. Along the south side common bond was used with a flat granite cap. A carriage shed with a brick privy for the men, erected circa 1730, formerly stood about 200' south of the Meeting House. It had a large stone fireplace along the east wall and narrow openings like gun slots in the walls closed by heavy shutters. Its foundations still remain just east of the foundations of a caretaker's house which was erected about 1860 and demolished in 1964.

Since 1962 the Brick Meeting House has been undergoing extensive renovation and limited restoration. This work is nearing completion. The restoration is to the period of the rebuilding in 1810, except for restoration of the pent cornice of 1752 on the North brick gable, and the retention of the frame women's cloakroom at the Southwest corner.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

East Nottingham Friends Meeting House, or Brick Meeting House as it has long been known, is of significance because of its association with William Penn who granted the site "for a Meeting House and Burial Yard, Forever" near the center of the 18,000 acre Nottingham Lots settlement which he caused to be given in 1701, at the early stage of a boundary dispute with Lord Baltimore. This dispute ultimately resulted in the Mason-Dixon Survey of 1764-67. William Penn's gift of 40 acres was a verbal grant which was not confirmed in writing until 1765 when his sons issued a parchment deed stating, "Whereas, our Late Honoured Father in 1701 did agree to grant a certain 40 acres...". The deed is still preserved in the Meeting House.

Originally part of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends, this was at one time the largest Friends meeting house south of Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Half-Yearly Meeting was held here as early as 1725. Among its early members (most of whom are buried here) were Thomas Chalkley, John Churchman, Benjamin Chandlee, and George Churchman. Thomas Chalkley, lawyer and Quaker minister, in his journal (1749) describes an expedition which he led in 1709 from the log meeting house which stood here before 1724 to preach to the Conestoga Indians. John Churchman, Jr. was a famous Quaker minister and reformer. His Journal (1779) tells of his missionary visits throughout the English Colonies in America and to England, Ireland, and Holland. His son, George Churchman is known as "the Founder of Westtown", the first Quaker boarding school in America. George Churchman's son, John Churchman 3rd, was a scientist and explorer; the second American to be made a member of the Imperial Russian Academy of Science, a cartographer, leader of an expedition towards the North Pole in 1805, and the author of several treatises on variations in the magnetic North. Benjamin Chandlee, Jr. and Sr. were among America's earliest and best clockmakers. Benjamin Sr. began to make clocks here in 1712. Benjamin Jr. was a trustee of the Brick Meeting House in 1765.

A school was established at the Meeting House in 1740. A lending library was in use here at least as early as 1783. In 1778, an American Army hospital was established for sick and wounded troops under General Smallwood's command; those who died here are buried in the cemetery. Lafayette's troops camped in the Meeting House woods on the first night of their march from the Head of Elk to victory at Yorktown in 1781.

Notable Quakers who visited and preached at the Brick Meeting House were John Woolman, Elias Hicks, Lucretia Mott, and Edward Hicks.
