Narrative Description

Summary Paragraph

The Joachim Massow/Charles & Annie Schutz House is located in rural Otoe County, Nebraska between the villages of Otoe and Dunbar, on gravel-surfaced F Road in steeply hilly terrain. The wood-frame, Gothic Revival Style house measures 32 feet wide by 34 feet deep and is 1.5 stories tall. The main, north façade has three pointed arch openings on the second floor, set within steeply gabled dormers. The house has recently been extensively rehabilitated from a deteriorated condition, including a new basement. The overall condition is very good and the integrity of exterior design is excellent. Major interior features, including the plan, door and window frames, and some original grain-painting doors also convey the original character of the dwelling. The proposed boundaries also include one non-contributing building, a metal equipment shed.

Narrative Description

The Joachim Massow/Charles & Annie Schutz House in rural Otoe County, Nebraska is a clapboard-sided, wood-frame house, 1-and-½ stories tall. The nearly square footprint of the house measures 32 feet wide by 34 feet deep. The principal façade faces north across a long farm yard to F Road, approximately 300 feet away. The front "yard" is defined by a gently curved entrance drive off F Road on the east side, and a tree mass/windbreak on the west side. The house was carefully renovated in recent years. The project also involved moving an early 20th century barn to the property to save it from demolition and provide a garage/outbuilding for the house. The other outbuildings of the farmstead range from fair to poor condition and the overall site does not have sufficient integrity for NRHP-eligibility; therefore, the house alone is the subject of this nomination. The nominated area includes the house and its long "front yard" and is bounded by Otoe County Road F on the north, the driveway into the property on the east, the tree line behind the house on the south, and the edge of the tree mass/wind break on the west. The dimensions of the site are approximately 140 feet east-west by 360 feet north-south, containing approximately one acre. This parcel includes a corrugated metal equipment shed near the northeast corner of the front yard, with an open side facing the house. This later building is not a contributing historic resource.

The front portion of the house has a side-gable roof, ornamented on the front, north side with three characteristic Gothic Revival, steeply pitched façade gables. The Gothic pointed arch opening in each of the north gables is further underscored by the matching shutters. The taller central gable provides a second floor door opening onto the roof of the small, central porch. The wrought iron railing protecting that roof/deck is a recent addition, but its thin pickets and trefoil finials produce a visually light-weight feature that does not detract from the Gothic Revival design. The center entrance is sheltered by a small porch with turned posts. The porch is flanked by two double-hung, 2-over-2 windows. The pointed arched openings are topped with drip moldings, while the lintels of the lower windows have a shallow peak.

The rear wing of the house forms a T-shaped roof plan, but is infilled at the first-story with a glazed porch at the southeast corner, providing a second entrance to the home. The east pitch of the rear gable roof has a steep façade gable with a double, square-headed window. The southwest corner is also infilled under an extension of the rear gable's west pitch, which reaches down to first floor level. A shed dormer has been added as part of the recent rehabilitation of the house to expand a second floor bedroom. Its position at the most discrete rear corner of the house minimizes its impact on the original design and the smaller, 1-over-1 sash in the dormer are compatible but differentiated from the larger, taller 2-over-2 original windows. The added windows also omit the peaked lintels, which identify the original windows.

The front door opens on a small vestibule with parlor doors to the east and west. The front and parlor doors are grain painted on the side facing the vestibule; the reverse side of each is monochromatic. If other woodwork in the house had grain-painting, it has been lost under subsequent repainting. The west parlor is wider than the east parlor by about two feet, but the rooms are otherwise very similar with pairs of windows on each of the outer walls, and chimneys centered between the end wall windows. Only the west chimney still continues above the roofline on the exterior.

Both parlors have south doors opening into the large kitchen centered at the rear of the house and measuring 15 feet wide by 18.5 feet deep. Between the two parlors are two staircases, accessed by doors at the center of the north wall of the kitchen. With the two parlor doors and doors to the staircases serving the basement and second floor, the north wall is dominated by four doorways and their frames. The kitchen has wainscoting between the doors and on the other walls, to a height of about 4 feet. Echoing the window trim of the exterior, the interior door and window frames have slightly peaked lintels. The kitchen is flanked by small service rooms to the west (including a laundry room, bathroom, and rear pantry) and to the east by a larger pantry and the rear porch.

Upstairs, the stairwell is open and protected by a railing of flat slats shaped approximately like oars, with a decorative hole pierced through the wider bottom "blade." The door to the porch deck lights the top of the stairs in dramatic fashion with red panes of glass. The glazing is new but replicates the original glazing of another Gothic Revival farmhouse in the vicinity. The front of the upper floor contains a bedroom in each corner and there is a small bathroom at the south end of the upper stair hall. The south end of the upper floor contains a large master bedroom with another bathroom in the added dormer.

The recent renovation of this house also included a new basement in place of a collapsing limestone foundation. The new, cast-in-place concrete foundation is veneered on the exterior with old, quarry-faced concrete foundation blocks. The interior plaster was lost but the original woodwork was saved and reinstalled over drywall. The careful renovation protected the remaining features of the Massow/Schutz House and allow it to still strongly express its Gothic Revival exterior and compact, efficient plan.

Statement of Significance

Summary Paragraph

The Joachim Massow/Charles & Annie Schutz House is locally significant in eastern Nebraska as one of the best regional examples of the Gothic Revival style applied to a farmhouse, in good condition, with strong integrity.

Narrative

The town of Dunbar, approximately four miles south and east of the Massow/Schutz House, was established in 1856 as "Wilson," on the freighting route 10 miles (one day's freight-wagon journey) from Nebraska City.¹ The relatively early (for Nebraska) settlement of Otoe County by European-Americans is reflected in the pre-Civil War land transactions of its rural environs. The land on which the house stands and other parcels in the vicinity were conveyed as veterans' bonuses to soldiers of the War of 1812, recorded in patents from the U. S. Government before 1861.²

The exact date of construction of the Massow/Schutz House, like many rural Nebraska houses, is not documented, but can be generally established by analysis of the ownership of this and related houses in the vicinity. A nearby house of similar original style and plan can be strongly surmised to date from the 1870s, based on patent dates on hardware throughout the house, a purchase in 1879 by a well-established farmer, and the 1880 census reflecting his household size of 12 (6 young children, two farm laborers, a boarder, and a much needed servant girl).³ The Massow/Schutz House quarter section was acquired in 1875 by Joachim Massow (sometimes Joakim, sometimes Messon or Mussow) at a foreclosure auction from the heirs of Mary Lottridge.⁴ Lottridge had paid over $2600 in value six years before,⁵ while Massow's high bid for 160 acres was just over $1000. Lottridge's family apparently had all left Otoe County by 1880 and his widower was living with his parents in Iowa, hinting they had suffered severe economic reversals and pointing towards Massow as the more likely builder of the relatively substantial house, which his family retained until 1908.⁶ The 1880 Census shows "Joakim Mussow" residing with his daughter Annie Schutz, her husband Charles, and their infant daughter Emma. Massow was a farmer (as was Charles Schutz), a native of Mecklenburg (now northern Germany), and in 1880 was 52 years old.

Gothic Revival residences in Otoe County, Nebraska

The Gothic Revival style is relatively rare in Nebraska, although it is seen applied to small rural schools and churches, both of which are threatened property types. Gothic Revival residences are uncommon, but the early settlement of southeastern Nebraska, within the later part of the style's popularity, provides more examples of the style than in other regions of the state.

The Jasper Ware House in Nebraska City (NRHP, OT00-014) is a premier example of the Gothic Revival style in brick, with decorative bargeboards on the single façade gable. The 1992 Reconnaissance Survey of Otoe County by the Nebraska State Historical Society identified an additional handful of residential examples of the style, several of which were already abandoned and deteriorating two decades ago. Few of them featured the archetypical three-façade gables with pointed arched openings. OT00-114, OT00-080, OT00-176, and OT00-320 are all single-façade-gable examples, evaluated as NRHP eligible in 1992. OT00-276 has triple gables, but square-headed windows. The Massow/Schutz House retains not only its highly characteristic, Gothic Revival exterior features but also key interior elements including the grain-painted woodwork of the vestibule, extensive interior woodwork, and compact plan. The house in 2012 is in vastly better condition than when it was evaluated as NR-eligible in 1992 and it stands a far better chance of continued preservation than most of its Otoe County counterparts.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

A parcel bounded by F Road on the north, the driveway extending south from F Road on the east side of the house as the eastern boundary, to a line extended east-west corresponding to the rear wall of the house, and a similar line west of the house extending back to F Road, encompassing the house and its front yard/set back from F Road, and excluding the non-eligible farm buildings except a low metal shed near F Road, just west of the driveway.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundaries include the historic Massow/Schutz House and the front yard that provides its spacious rural setting off gravel F Road, without including additional portions of the non-contributing farmstead except a metal shed positioned in that front yard.
