DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Chowan County Court House stands on the north side of East King Street about one block east of the central business district of Edenton, North Carolina. The building faces south across East King Street toward a small park, known as Court House Green, and the shore of Edenton Bay. In the immediate vicinity of the court house are a number of the city's oldest houses, many of them of architectural and/or historical significance.

Erected in 1767, the Chowan County Court House is a two-story building with a T-shaped plan and a one-story semicircular apse at its center rear. The main block of the building is approximately 68½ feet wide and 30 feet deep; the rear leg of the T is 33 feet wide and projects 17 feet. In each angle of the main block and the rear leg is a one-story office addition, date uncertain. The court house is constructed of brick laid in Flemish bond with wood trim painted white.

Exterior detailing on the court house is distinctly Georgian but in general of the simplest. The five-bay front facade is dominated by a three-bay (33 feet) projecting pavilion topped by a classic pediment. The main entrance, at the center of the pavilion, is flanked by Doric pilasters carrying an entablature and a triangular pediment. Windows--9/9 sash on the first floor, 9/6 on the second--are topped by flat brick arches. A belt course marks the second floor line and a cornice ornamented with modillions forms a continuous line below the hipped roof.

The most ornate exterior feature is the two-stage wooden cupola with ogival roof surmounted by a tall weathervane. The lower stage is square and carries a clock on each face, those on the east, south, and west framed by open pediments supported by slender brackets. The upper stage is octagonal and has round-arched, louvered openings set in molded surrounds with keystones. The rear slope of the roof is broken by a slender chimney on either side of the cupola.

The first floor of the court house is devoted almost entirely to a large courtroom. In the semicircular apse on the rear (north) wall of this room is a high-backed, pedimented judge's chair, similar to that in the House of Burgesses at Williamsburg prior to 1747. The courtroom was altered somewhat, probably between 1840 and 1850, when the original floor was covered with wood and six columns were put in as support for the floor above; however, the dado of the apse, the balustraded railing, and the judge's chair are unchanged. The courtroom is flanked by two offices on the east and an office and the stair hall on the west.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Chowan County Court House in Edenton, North Carolina, is a two-story brick structure with a T-shaped plan and a one-story semicircular apse at its center rear. Erected in 1767, the Court House is one of the most notable Georgian public buildings in the United States and probably the finest surviving example of the type in the Southern colonies. Maintained in excellent condition, the Chowan County Court House is little-altered and retains most its original interiors. The building still serves as the county court house and is also open to visitors during regular business hours.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

Edenton, known as Queen Anne's Town until its incorporation in 1727, dates from 1658 and was North Carolina's first permanent settlement. In 1715 the colony's Assembly passed an act providing for the construction at Edenton of a court house in which its sessions could be held. That building was completed in 1719. The second and existing court house was erected in 1767.

The architect of the Chowan County Court House is unknown. However, it has been attributed to Gilbert Leigh, who is believed to have come originally from Williamsburg, Virginia, and who was living in Edenton at the time the building was constructed. More recently, the court house has also been attributed to John Hawkes, who was brought from England to design Governor William Tryon's Palace at New Bern, North Carolina (completed in 1769 or 1770).

The small open space on which the court house fronts is known as Court House Green. Reserved as public property in 1712 when Edenton was laid out on its present plan, the green was the site of the 1719 court house. About the time of the American Revolution, this land was cleared for use as a drill ground. By 1800, it had become the small park which it is today.

The major portion of the second floor of the court house is occupied by the assembly hall (also used as a ballroom), containing original full-height paneling and a complete entablature. Measuring 30 by 45 feet with a 13 foot high ceiling, this was said to be the largest paneled room in the colonies. Individual panels, hand-carved in white pine, are 33 inches wide, 48 inches long, and 1½ inches thick. The assembly hall is flanked by a Masonic Room (Unanimity Lodge) on the east and an office and the stair hall on the west.

From: ^{Acting} Director, National Park Service

Subject: National Historic Landmark recommendations, 61st meeting of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments

Enclosed herewith is the memorandum of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments summarizing its findings and recommendations on the National Survey of Historic Sites and Buildings partial theme study of "Colonial Architecture." This memorandum makes two principal recommendations: (1) That 77 sites encompassed by this study be declared eligible for National Historic Landmark status. These are listed under Sections A, B, C, and D of the memorandum; (2) That 41 of these sites be given further consideration in long range plans for addition to the National Park System.

We recommend that you approve the Advisory Board's memorandum, and that it be returned to this office to become a part of the permanent record of actions recommended by the Board and approved by you.
