This rectangular cross plan building has a projecting doric tetrastyle portico that is emphasized by the domed clock tower rising in three stages directly behind the pediment.

First story windows have round arches with emphasized keystones. The second story windows are rectangular. Stone quoins are used on the entry portico as well as the corners of the building, contrasting with the deep red brick.

On the interior, the rotunda is still obvious on the first floor in spite of recent alterations. One enters the courtroom from the side. Pilasters are decorative elements seen in the litigation section; they frame the bench which features a heavy entablature and pediment.
