Description Summary:

Memory Lane is a two-and-one half story, frame Italianate style house constructed in 1864 and distinguished by extensive porches, decorative brackets, and an octagonal cupola crowned with an ornate finial. The walls are sheathed in wooden clapboards. The roof is asphalt shingle with three brick chimneys. The house is sited on high ground facing directly south in the middle of a 40-acre farm in the village of Williston. Williston was once a thriving port on the Choptank River, where steamboats would stop twice daily to ship grains and tobacco to the Chesapeake Bay and ports beyond. The property immediately surrounding the house retains noteworthy landscape features, including a pair of European Purple Beeches and the National Champion Bigtooth Aspen. Remnants of a grand circular driveway are in evidence out front with a central raised mound topped with massive English boxwoods. At the entrance to the property towers a matching pair of American Beeches. Directly behind the main house is a weatherboarded milkhouse, with the plaster walls and water troughs still intact, and a hip roofed, four seat, privy. The property is in very good condition and has had very little alteration since its construction with the exception of modernization of plumbing and mechanical systems and upgrading of the kitchen and bathrooms.

General Description

The Memory Lane house faces directly south. It is a T-shaped dwelling with a large front section with high ceilings large rooms and a rear ell with lower ceilings and smaller rooms. The house consists of two stories with an attic and a crawl space. The entire front facade features a one story wraparound porch with brick piers and latticework in-between with rectangular columns, eight across the front and four down each side, with chamfered corners. Each porch opening features wooden moldings which create an arched portal opening. The porch ceiling is plaster and the porch posts feature ornate scroll column brackets. The first floor features tall floor to ceiling windows approximately eight feet tall, with four over four panes. The entire exterior facade is covered with wood weatherboard siding. The second story features three shorter four over four windows. The asphalt roof features wide, overhanging eaves supported by large, ornate cornice brackets, sixteen across the front facade and eight down each side. Each end of the dwelling features an interior brick chimney. The dwelling is crowned with an octagonal cupola, featuring eight operable windows, ornate brackets, and topped with an ornate turned finial.

The interior floor plan features a large front section that consists basically of four large rooms, two downstairs and two up, on either side of a central stairway. The front staircase features a particularly ornate carved newel post and fancy carved step ends. The wide staircase features turned balusters and a mahogany railing. Each of the four large rooms in the front section has a fireplace and a mantel and all the rooms feature wide carved moldings around the doors and windows with particularly fancy moldings in the downstairs parlor. All the walls inside the dwelling were originally wallpapered but were covered with textured plaster around 1960 and still retain that finish.

The rear ell features smaller rooms with lower ceilings with three window bays on each floor and a single window on the rear. Flooring throughout the house is of random width soft yellow pine. The porch roof was originally metal but is now covered in asphalt shingle. The main roof was originally wood shingle but is now asphalt shingle. Window and door surrounds feature fancy milled moldings. The cornice brackets on the rear ell are of a more simple design.

The wood framed building is sheathed in horizontal drop siding and rests on a brick foundation. All windows, doors, and hardware are original. The kitchen has been modernized, bathrooms have been added, and hot water oil fired baseboard heat was added around 1960.

The dwelling is situated in a grove of large old trees approximately 250 feet back from the road. Two large European Purple Beech trees shade the house on its southwest corner. A national champion Bigtooth Aspen shade the house on the northeast corner. A forest of mixed trees stands behind the house to the north. A raised boxwood mound at the front of the house crowns what was once a circular driveway. The front yard is extensively landscaped highlighted by two enormous American Beech trees with a large iron chain linking them at what was obviously the entrance to the property before the trees grew too large to allow vehicles to pass between them. The dwelling is sited on high ground with approximately one acre of lawn, surrounded by agricultural fields.

Directly behind the dwelling stand a weatherboarded milkhouse with its water troughs and plastered walls and ceilings intact. The milkhouse is 12 by 12 feet in dimensions on a brick foundation and has a hip roof with wide overhanging eaves, with a cedar shake roof and a crowned at the top with a simple straight finial. Behind the dwelling approximately 50 feet to the northwest stands the old privy, in original but deteriorated condition. The privy is 10 by 10 feet in dimension on a brick foundation and features four seats, plaster walls and ceiling, wainscoting, and two six over six windows. It has a hip roof with a badly deteriorated cedar shake roof and is absent of a finial. Both outbuildings are finished in simple weatherboarding and with the exception of the finials are devoid of any exterior ornamentation seen on the main dwelling. The entire property retains a high degree of integrity, having had only three sets of owners in its history.

Significance Summary:

Memory Lane, built in 1864, is a product of the national wave of interest in the Italianate style in America, and is an exceptional example of the ornate craftsmanship of this style. Contextually it relates to the great impact of the shipping trade on the area's economy, whereas the Italianate style cupola served as an enclosed widows walk from which the steamboats could be seen approaching the nearby wharf. This home was built by the wealthy slipping magnate who ran the wharf, A. J. Willis, as a wedding gift for his daughter when she married. The Italianate style was frequently chosen by wealthy country landowners of the period who wanted to show off their taste. With its wide overhanging eaves, ornate brackets, large cupola, and extensive porches, the house meets National Register Criterion C in the area of Architecture as one of the best residential examples of the Italianate style on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

RESOURCE HISTORY AND HISTORIC CONTEXT

Memory Lane was built in 1864 in the village of Williston, a thriving shipping port on the Choptank River in Caroline County, MD, by Colonel A. J. Willis, a shipping magnate who ran the port of Williston, as a wedding gift for his daughter Mary Virginia. She married B. Gootee Stevens, who became president of the Denton National Bank. Colonel Willis became a very wealthy as a result of the thriving shipping trade and set out to build an appropriate showplace for his daughter and her husband to live in.

Memory Lane was the seat of a 40 acre farm at the entrance to the village of Williston and serves as an ornate symbol of the success of the shipping port. At that time Williston was one of the leading ports in the county, with steamboats stopping twice daily to export the grains grown in the fertile fields of Caroline County. By 1860 the Italianate mode's informal, picturesque character had supplanted the Greek Revival in popularity and was the mode chosen for Memory Lane. The large octagonal cupola that crowns Memory Lane was an important feature. At a time when the rivers were the highways of America, these rooftop observatories provided a bird's eye view of ships transporting goods and people into and out of port. The cupola also served as a form of air conditioning, as its eight windows could be opened in the warm summer months to let hot air rise up and out of the house.

Memory Lane's current physical condition is a superb representation of its period of significance. The property is in remarkably original condition, now with only the third set of owners in its history, and with very little changes since 1864. The house retains all of its original exterior moldings, including the large ornate sandwich brackets under the wide, overhanging eaves that were the hallmark of the Italianate mode at the time. These sandwich-style brackets were mass produced by 1864 and were readily available through catalog order.

An expansive and elegant porch is another distinctive feature of the Italianate style, and the porch at Memory Lane is a perfect example. Square porch posts with beveled edges and fancy gingerbread moldings support an especially wide veranda that still retains its original curved plaster porch ceiling.

Memory Lane possesses many of the same features found in Design XXVII in Andrew Jackson Downing's Architecture of Country Houses, published in 1850. This design featured a rectangular house with three windows on the upper floor, a roof supported by brackets, and a one-story wraparound porch supported by square posts with chamfered columns and column brackets. As described by Downing, "A simple, rational, convenient, and economical dwelling for the southern part of the Union, is all that we have aimed at in this design. A modification of the Venetian mode has been chosen for the exterior, because it affords, in its broadly projecting roof and long veranda, that ample shade so indispensable to all dwellings in a southern climate."
