Statement of Significance

On July 6, 1777, General John Burgoyne with an army of 9,000 men captured Fort Ticonderoga, thus throwing northern New York, western Vermont and western Massachusetts open to invasion. On July 7 Major General Philip Schuyler called upon Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Albany County of New York to send their militia forces to Albany to help check the British advance. On July 18 the General Court of New Hampshire divided their militia into two brigades, ordered out one fourth of the militia for two months service, and commissioned Stark as brigadier general to lead the second brigade. Their orders directed Stark to cooperate with the troops of Vermont, or of any other State, or of the Continental Army, or to act "...separately as it shall appear expedient to you for the protection of the people or the annoyance of the enemy." This left Stark free to do exactly as he pleased. On July 20 Schuyler ordered any New Hampshire militia en route to his army to join Colonel Seth Warner of the Green Mountain Continental Ranger Regiment, who was at Manchester, Vermont. Within a week, attracted by his name, Stark raised 25 companies and on August 7 arrived at Manchester with 1500 New Hampshire men. Here Major General Benjamin Lincoln of the Continental Army, acting under orders from Schuyler, directed Stark to march with his brigade and join Schuyler's main army on the Hudson River at Stillwater, New York. Disliking Schuyler and still angry at the Continental Congress, Stark refused and instead marched his force 20 miles south to Bennington, Vermont, where he arrived on August 9 about halfway between Manchester and Stillwater.

Meanwhile Burgoyne's army had advanced to Fort Miller and from here an expedition of about 656 men, mostly Germans, commanded by Colonel Friedrich Baum, marched for Bennington, where the Americans had brought in large numbers of oxen, cattle, horses, and supplies-items that were essential to Burgoyne if he was to be able to transport his army to Albany. On August 16 the American militia, about 1600 strong, attacked Baum's column in New York State, about five miles northwest of Bennington, and after a severe fight completely defeated the Germans. On August 15 Burgoyne had dispatched a second force of some 640 Germans under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Breyman to support Baum. Breyman arrived on the field of battle just as the struggle was ending and drove Stark's victorious but disorganized militia from the field. At this juncture, Colonel Warner and about 400 men arrived, checking the German advance, giving Stark time to rally his men, and together Stark and Warner threw Breyman into a rapid retreat. Burgoyne lost 755 men and four cannons, or about 10% of his army in this battle. His casualities included 207 dead and 518 prisoners. American losses were about 30 killed and 40 wounded. Stark returned to Bennington and remained there until September 11; on September 14 he finally joined the main American army, now commanded by Major General Horatio Gates, at Stillwater. His forc e, due to men leaving for home, was reduced to 800 men and on September 18, the remaining men also went home, their time of service, two months, being up Stark was present at the First Battle of Saratoga the following day, but had ho soldiers left to command.

Statement of Significance

Stark received the thanks of Congress for his victory at Bennington, after having been censored for disregarding orders for the different movement of his men. On October 4, 1777, he was also made a brigadier general in the Continental Army. Meanwhile, Stark had returned to New Hampshire and assumed command of four more newly raised militia regiments of 1,583 men. On October 12 Stark placed his brigade on the northwest side of Saratoga (now Schuylerville), New York, thereby completing the American encirclement of Burgoyne's army. Stark was present at the British surrender on October 17, 1777.

During the remainder of the War for Independence, now a brigadier general in the Continental Army, Stark was twice commander of the northern department. During the summer and autumn of 1781 his headquarters was located in the Philip Schuyler House (still standing) at Schuylerville (Old Saratoga). He also served with Gates in Rhode Island in 1779; participated in the skirmish at Springfield, New Jersey, June 7, 1780, and acted on the board of general officers appointed to try Major John Andre in October 1780. Stark was brevetted a major general on September 30, 1783, and resigned from the Continental Army on November 3, 1783.

After the war Stark retired to his estate at Manchester, eschewing public office and devoting himself to the cares entailed by a large farm and a family of 11 children. He died at Manchester on May 22, 1822, and was buried with full military honors in a cemetery on his own land.
