128 One of the best surviving examples of the double pen form of log houses remaining in the county (see Wa-187), this structure was given a Greek double portico in an effort to disguise its asymmetry. The dramatic site--the top of a bluff above Brush Creek--is indicative of attitudes toward the landscape and domestic siting in the greek Revival period.

ADDENDUM

Wa-128

The Curd-Moss house is a relatively well-preserved log house with no structural problems. The only minor alterations made to the house during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries are the addition of a parapet wall to the second floor of the portico, the replacement of the lower portions of the wooden piers of the portico, and the addition of a frame block to the rear of the house.
