Describe present and historic physical appearance.

This brick building, constructed in 1902, is a good example of the Victorian Gothic architectural style, a style which was popular in Utah in the years between 1880 and 1910. Gothic features include the prominent, steeply pitched gable roof that spans the main part of the building, and the three pointed arched windows in the principal facade. The center window is the largest, and all three are highlighted by low-relief segmental brick arches. Rusticated stone coping has been used along the raking eaves of the front gable. Further adding to the the rustic appearance of the building are the slate tiles infilling the top of the front gable and the use of a shadow line of low-relief brickwork to approximate a stepped gable along the raking eaves. Also, diamond-paned tracery is found in the transoms of the three front windows.

The rest of the building is plainer and more Victorian in style. Rows of main story and basement windows along each side and rear of the recentangular gabled block have slightly rounded segmental arches. The rear gable is pedimented but devoid of ornamentation. A one story gabled entrance wing is located on the front of the south side, and there is another one story gabled extension to the rear of the main block. Both these sections appear to be original and have rusticated coping along their raking eaves. A smaller addition has been placed at the southeast corner of the rear section which also appears original. The building remains in good historic condition.

Constructed in 1902, the Weber Stake Relief Society Building is locally significant as the center of activities for the women's organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon or LDS Church). During the late nineteenth century, Relief Society women in virtually every Mormon community constructed buildings to accommodate their activities. There were meetinghouses, granaries, stores, and homes of assistance for the needy. These buildings represent the significant role the Relief Society played in promoting the spiritual and temporal welfare of Mormon communities. Relief Society buildings were gradually abandoned during the early twentieth century as new accommodations for the Relief Society were provided within the main church buildings being constructed at that time. Although the building acted as a religious structure, its significance is derived from its representation of the historical theme of Relief Society activity in early Mormon communities.

The Weber Stake Relief Society was organized in 1877 under the direction of Brigham Young and other LDS church officials. It was reportedly the first Relief Society group to be organized by stake rather than ward (a stake comprises several wards or congregations).¹ Like Relief Society groups church-wide, the Weber Stake Relief Society was responsible for providing assistance to the poor, the sick and the needy. It is unknown where the group met during its first 25 years, but in 1902 plans were made for constructing a large brick building on Tabernacle Square in downtown Ogden. Property for the building was donated by the Ogden Third Ward of the LDS church. Work commenced in the spring of 1902 under the supervision of a three-man building committee consisting of D.H. Peery, Barnard White and S.W.

Wade. Funds were obtained by the women through donations and various fund-raising projects. Most of the $5,000 construction cost was paid by the time the building was dedicated on July, 19, 1902. The dedication was attended by a number of church officials and scores of women who were also celebrating the 25th anniversary of the organization of the Weber Stake Relief Society.² The building was used by the Relief Society for a variety of purposes, including meetings, quilt-making, concerts, dances, and other cultural events.

Changes in church organization and policy brought an end to the use of the building by the Relief Society in 1926. The Weber Stake had been divided into three stakes in 1908, and with the growth of those organizations the building was unable to accommodate all the needs of the Relief Society. In addition, the church began constructing new church buildings which included accommodations for the Relief Society and other auxiliary functions. As a result of those developments, the building was no longer needed as a Relief Society facility. In 1926 it was transferred to the Weber County Daughters of Utah Pioneers in 1926 with the stipulations that it be used as a non-profit museum for displaying pioneer relics. If those conditions were not adhered to then the property was to revert back to the church. The Weber County Daughters of Utah Pioneers have maintained a museum in the building to the present.

ABSTRACT/SUMMARY COMMENTS:

The information provided by the SHPO documents that the proposed move, if conducted as described, will not adversely affect those qualities for which the Weber Stake Relief Society Building was originally listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The property is significant under National Register Criterion A, for illustrating the important early twentieth century role the Relief Society played in promoting the spiritual and temporal welfare of Mormon communities in Utah. Over the years, the area surrounding the building's immediate site has seen significant redevelopment resulting in a substantial loss of integrity of setting. The building's rarity as resource and the current altered setting largely mitigate the negative effects of the building's proposed relocation. The building's remaining significant features and associations will not be adversely affected by the small move. There are no known historic resources on the proposed new site.

CAROL SHULL
KEEPER
NATIONAL REGISTER OF HISTORIC PLACES
1201 EYE STREET, NW, 8th FLOOR (MS 2280)
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20005

Dear Ms. Shull:

According to 36 CFR 60.14 (b), Relocating properties listed in the National Register, when a building listed in the register is proposed to be moved it must go through the required review and approval procedures for National Register nominations.

Procedures for Move and New Location

The National Register-listed Weber Stake Relief Society Building (NRIS #88003438) is presently located at 2148 Grant Avenue in the city of Ogden on a large urban city block with two other large buildings and a one-story parking structure that surrounds the building on two sides—all non-historic resources. It currently has an open space to the south of the building which contains the Miles Goodyear Cabin, also listed on the National Register. The Goodyear Cabin will also be moved and will retain the same orientation to the Relief Society Building as it currently does (see separate approval for move letter for the Miles Goodyear Cabin).

The current landscape area is flat, but partially slopes toward the building causing water damage to the basement. The row of large north-facing windows is completely obscured by the parking structure. All of the significant architectural features of the building remain intact as described in the narrative written for the original nomination.

The structure is being moved by a reputable building-moving company with experience in the special needs of historical structures. The company will carefully raise the structure and place on supports according to industry standards and will move it one block away to the new site with a new address of 2104 E. Lincoln Avenue. The new location is one block west of the building's historical site. The new site will continue to have an open yard area to the south. The structure will retain its original orientation and remain the same distance from the street.

The new location is a slightly larger lot than the existing parcel and is made up of mostly grass and trees. The new lot's previous use was as a parking lot and a grassy open space used as a shallow water retention basin for the city of Ogden. The site has some mature trees and will be landscaped appropriately. The structure will continue to face west as it did historically. The distance from the street to the front of the building will be maintained exactly as in the original location.

Some on-site parking will be provided at the rear of the building with additional on-street parking available.

Reasons for move

With the remodel of the nearby Ogden LDS temple and tabernacle, a new underground parking structure was proposed right next to the existing DUP museum. The DUP organization was seeking funds to rehabilitate this historic resource and to increase the space needed for their collections as well as to provide both a drier and safer space for their collections in the basement area without having to add to the exterior of the building. At the existing location and in its present condition, two-thirds of the basement of the museum is not excavated and the one-third that is excavated has consistent water and flooding problems. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints offered to purchase the valuable land on which the DUP museum was located and for that purchase price acquire a new, suitable site for the museum in cooperation with the city of Ogden, pay for a qualified move of the historic building, include a new, fully waterproof basement that would triple the space of the existing basement as well as provide a safe environment for historic collections and artifacts. The foundation will be at the same elevation as the original. Additionally, the LDS church will rehabilitate the existing structure .

Appropriateness of New Setting

The new site is only a block away from the original location and has the same setting and feeling as the original site. Even with the move, the building is remaining in the same general neighborhood; the new location has the same character and feel with no significant changes in surroundings making the new site wholly appropriate for the historic DUP Museum. The structure will maintain its original orientation and remain the same distance from the street, maintaining its southern open yard area.

Effects of the Move on the Structure

The move and new location will have no significant effect on the integrity of the structure.

Effects of the Move on Archeological or Historic Resources at New Location

There were no archeological or historic resources discovered at the new location. This property had been previously developed by the city of Ogden as public parking and water retention.

Impact on Historical Significance

Although the Weber Stake Relief Society Building is historically, rather than architecturally significant, the move of the building to a new nearby site should not impact its significance. The building is the only representative Relief Society building in Ogden. Relief Society activities were once conducted in detached buildings up to the early twentieth century. But then organization of activities in the LDS Church transitioned away from multiple buildings to single buildings with multiple functions. For this reason, the Weber Stake Relief Society Building is iconic, in that it is the only remaining one in the fairly large city of Ogden, and one of only a handful extant in the entire region.

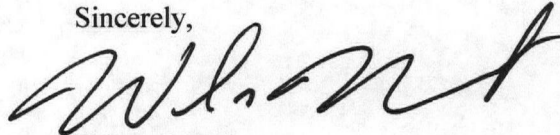

The building will be moved one block to the west to a site with a similar setting to its current one. It will be facing the same direction and same setbacks from the street. The setting will be almost exactly the same as in its current location, so the integrity will be retained. It will be placed on a concrete foundation and retain the same elevation. But this will make the building more useful as a museum and archive. In this regard, the building should still be considered an eligible building for retaining National Register significance.

Please find enclosed current photographs of the properties and a site map describing the proposed move.

The Utah State Historic Preservation Office has followed all the necessary notification and public hearing requirements as spelled out in the regulations 35 CFR 60.14(b)(3). The proposal to move was approved by the Utah State Historic Preservation Officer and Historic Preservation Review Board at its February 16, 2012 meeting.

Thank you for your assistance with this proposal. Should you have any questions please contact Cory Jensen at 801/533-3559, or at coryjensen@utah.gov.

Dear Mr. Martin:

Thank you for your correspondence of February 17, 2012, regarding the proposed move of the Weber Stake Relief Society Building in the Weber County, Utah.

In accordance with Federal Regulations 36 CFR 60.14(b), the National Register approves the proposed move of the historic Relief Society Building. Based on the information in your letter, and in the nomination file, the National Register has determined that the property will not suffer an appreciable loss of integrity as a result of the move. The building's significant features and associations will not be adversely affected by the short move within the Ogden community and there are no known historic resources on the proposed new site. Therefore, the Relief Society Building will remain listed in the National Register during and after the move unless integrity is destroyed.

After the Relief Society Building has been relocated and rehabilitated, please provide the National Register with the date of the move, photographs of the building on its new site, a revised map, acreage and verbal boundary description.

Thank you for the opportunity to review the proposed move, and for your interest in maintaining the integrity of the National Register list.

Summary Paragraph

The previously listed Weber Stake Relief Society Building (NRIS # 88003438), located in Ogden, Weber County, was moved to a new location at 2104 Lincoln Avenue, a block west of the former location (2148 Grant Avenue). The building was reestablished at the new site and ready for use in December 2012. Also, the Miles Goodyear Cabin (NRIS #71000866), which was located adjacent to the building at the former site was also moved to the current site, still adjacent to the Relief Society Building. The former site was undergoing new construction that would have resulted in the demolition of both buildings. Below is a description of the new site and rehabilitation of the building that was part of the move.

Narrative Description

Setting

The new location is slightly larger than the parcel that the building occupied on Grant Avenue, providing a more protected open space—similar to its historic setting. The current landscape area is very similar to the original. It is flat with landscaping of lawn and various shrubs and deciduous trees. The site has some mature trees and has been landscaped appropriately. The primary façade continues to face west, as it did at the former site, and the distance from the street to the building has been maintained exactly, as has the ground-level elevation. Since the building is no longer encumbered as it was by an encroaching parking structure at the former site, the entire building is now much more visible to the public, as it would have been historically.

Curved concrete and brick-paved walkways provide access (including ADA accessibility) to the various entrances. A below-grade stairwell provides access to the basement entryway on the north elevation. As it is an urban setting, there is a small asphalt surfaced parking lot behind the building. A decorative metal fence surrounds a portion of the property as well. There is a small, brick-paved plaza and walkway from the museum to the Miles Goodyear Cabin (NRIS #71000866), which was also moved to the site, and from the parking lot at the rear of the museum to Lincoln street at the front (west).

New Foundation

The building was placed on a new full basement of poured concrete, on top of which is a concrete block foundation. Stone from the original foundation was reused to face the new foundation, from the brick walls down to grade level, retaining the historical appearance. The new basement is divided up into a number of storage and exhibit spaces along with restrooms and mechanical rooms in order to leave the main floor open for exhibits.

Building Exterior

The exterior has undergone minor rehabilitation to return it to a more historic appearance. Minor brick repair was completed and mortar repointed with like soft mix to match color and softness of the historic mortar. The brick was then carefully cleaned with a light detergent—no harsh methods or power spraying—and still retains its weathered patina.

The original exterior doors were sanded, filled, painted and re-hung with good weather stripping. All historic windows, including basement windows were retained and restored with sanding and painting. On the main floor interior, and entire exterior, the moldings and woodwork were all retained, filled and repainted. The roof has received new asphalt shingles in the past five years to replace the older asphalt roofing.

Historic architectural detail had been lost more recently beneath a monochrome paint job in the faux half-timbered gables. In historic photographs it is apparent the decorative half-timbering in the south- and east-facing gables was a darker color that contrasted with the lighter color plaster beneath. This paint scheme in both rear gables has been restored, and the timbers now contrast with the stucco walls.

Building Interior

The existing attic trusses were repaired with like sister members where they had failed over time. All other existing flooring, wood molding and windows were retained and restored.

New furnaces and air conditioning were installed in the basement with the existing chimney being repaired and used for venting the new HVAC system. A handicap lift and walkout stair were added as required by code for the new basement. Around the new lift the stairway to the basement had to be reworked for safety reasons and to accommodate the lift but this space had been altered many times over the history of the building. Handrails, newel posts and balusters were made to match the historic handrails.

Existing floor vents were used for the new mechanical and no changes were made on the main floor for this new system. Electrical was carefully updated without any damage to the historic fabric. The minor plumbing that existed was completely replaced and only exists in the new basement.

Although the building has been moved to a new site, the setting is very near the appearance of the original before more modern structures had altered the landscape. Through careful rehabilitation of the exterior and public interior spaces, and low-impact modern upgrades in the basement, the Weber Stake Relief Society Building retains its historical integrity and will be a better utilized building in the community.

ABSTRACT/SUMMARY COMMENTS:

This building is historically significant based on its association with the Relief Society, a women's organization within the LDS Church. The Mormon Relief Society context outlined in the cover form only extends the significance period to 1910, but the individual form for this property justifies extending the period to 1926.
