National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Argyle, Houma, Terrebonne Parish, LA

Argyle (c. 1906) is a one-and-one-half story frame cottage which mainly displays elements of the Eastlake style. The house stands on its original Terrebonne Parish site facing U. S. Highway 90 and Bayou Black. Originally a rural plantation home, the dwelling is now within Houma's corporate limits and is flanked by modern residences. Although it has experienced some change since construction, Argyle remains eligible for National Register listing.

The residence's first floor plan consists of a large central hall with two rooms on each side. Behind the rear rooms, a cross hall stands in the location where one would expect to find a gallery. Architectural evidence suggests that this rear hall has always been enclosed. The home's original kitchen is attached to the rear wall of the cross hall but must be entered from a porch. An original bathroom wing stands on one rear corner of the home. The second floor's plan contains a hallway with one room on each side. This hallway projects beyond the front and rear rooflines in dormer fashion and opens to a small balcony on the facade.

Argyle's Eastlake features are found primarily on its gallery and the above mentioned balcony. Both have turned Eastlake columns and balustrades composed of turned balusters. A curved projection fills the gallery's middle bay. Eastlake screens outline the gallery and balcony roofs. Brackets carved to resemble plant forms distinguish the gallery, while much simpler geometric brackets frame the balcony's bay. The interior's important Eastlake feature is a grille which separates the central hall from the rear cross hall. Its design features hearts, diamonds, and floral motifs. The grille's supports are in the form of thin, fluted columns.

The home displays a few Colonial Revival features. They include:

- 1) a restrained Palladian window piercing the rear dormer,
- 2) the staircase's newel post, which features dentils, anthemion-like designs, egg and dart molding, and a bas relief design suggestive of entwined vines surrounding an acanthus leaf,
- 3) the presence of a scroll motif decorating the stair's risers as well as the opening through which the stair passes on the second floor, and

- 4) mantels and overmantels typical of the style.

Other features of interest in the home include five panel doors, interior transoms, paneled wainscotting in the central and rear halls, one surviving set of pocket doors, and tall front windows which can be raised high enough to serve as doors to the gallery.

Argyle has experienced the following alterations since its construction:

- 1) the original hipped gallery roof has been replaced by one in the form of a shed, and the rear screened porch providing access to the original kitchen has been enclosed.
- 2) a modern kitchen has been created by walling off one end of the rear cross hall and lowering its roof. As part of this process, a door between the rear hall and the east rear room has been blocked. The original kitchen has been converted into a laundry room, and servants quarters which were apparently attached to the rear of the home have been removed.
- 3) exterior stairs leading to the bath wing and the original kitchen have been lost, the exterior stairs leading to the modern kitchen have been changed from a winder to a straight configuration, and the two stairs flanking the gallery's curved projection have been replaced. The latter now have cast iron railings.
- 4) two sets of pocket doors have been removed from the interior. One was located directly behind the Eastlake grille and separated the center hall from the rear cross hall. The other was located between the two rooms on the west side of the structure. The space left by the removal of the doors has been filled, and a smaller door has been installed in the new wall.
- 5) the installation of masonite on all of the first floor's walls and paneling in one second story room.

Although the above mentioned alterations are regrettable, none impacts the intact architectural features which define Argyle's identity as an Eastlake house. As a rare example of the style within Terrebonne Parish (see Part 8), Argyle is a legitimate candidate for National Register listing.

Argyle is locally significant in the area of architecture within Terrebonne Parish because it is a rare and important example of the Eastlake style. In a parish in which prosperous citizens were slow to abandon previously accepted housing forms, the building is one of only a few which attempt to articulate characteristics of this style on a house of any distinction.

Terrebonne is a largely rural parish with a core of elaborate homes displaying outdated architectural styles. For example, as late as the last two decades of the nineteenth century, large houses in the older Gothic Revival and Greek Revival modes were being erected by wealthy but conservative citizens who withheld their patronage from newer styles such as Eastlake. Instead, it was the more stylistically up-to-date middle class which adopted elements of the Eastlake by attaching turned columns and three dimensional brackets to otherwise plain cottages. As a result, the Eastlake style seldom reached its full decorative potential on a Terrebonne Parish house. In fact, the Historic Standing Structures Survey for Terrebonne Parish indicates that, out of over 1,100 50+ year old buildings surveyed, only about a dozen are notable examples of the Eastlake style. ("Notable" houses are those of moderate or large size and featuring intensive Eastlake styling.) And of this number, only four display fully developed Eastlake gallery ornamentation (i.e., turned columns, balustrade, brackets, and screen). Against this background, Argyle is significant for its fully articulated Eastlake gallery with a curving middle bay flanked by stairs.

Historical Note

The home was built for Phelin Bonvillain c.1906 as the main house for a sugar cane plantation. The parcel upon which it stands is actually composed of land from two plantations--one known as Argyle and the other as Mulberry. For this reason, both names have been associated with the house. The building changed hands several times before being purchased by the Ingram family in 1947. It remains in their hands today.
