SOUTH CAROLINIANA LIBRARY

The Library, on the University of South Carolina's tree-lined Horseshoe, was completed in 1840 and is the oldest separate college library building in the United States. Possibly designed by Robert Mills, South Caroliniana features a Millsian facade and its reading room is a replica of Bullfinch's Library of Congress Reading Room. In addition to housing all publications written by South Carolinians or about South Carolina, the library contains the Henry P. Kendall and the Olin Johnston Memorial Rooms. Wings designed by J. Carroll Johnson were added in 1927.

COLUMBIA, S. C. -- Trees lining a shaded walk at the University of South Carolina form a "frame" for this photograph of DeSaussure College, second-oldest structure on the campus. It now houses the Department of Foreign Languages. (USC Photo - McGrail)
