Marshall/McNeil House
Hancock County, West Virginia

The Marshall/McNeil House is an elegant 19th century two and one half story Queen Anne style residence built in 1887 located on Ridge Avenue in New Cumberland, West Virginia overlooking the Ohio River. The house was built in 1887 by lawyer and West Virginia State Senator, Oliver Marshall. The Marshall/McNeil House has remained in the Marshall family since its construction. The house was built in 1887 by Oliver Marshall.

Exterior

The two and one half story, three bay brick residence has an asphalt roof and stone foundation. All windows are double-sash with limestone sills and lintels. Windows have interior wood shutters. Front gable roof end to right has three Queen Anne windows, decorative wood blocks in peak and a stringcourse under the eaves. There are double brackets at the corners. Gable has diamond lights. Brick sidewalk has the word "ETNA" imprinted in bricks.

West (Front) Facade

The front facade has 3 bays. There is a full porch with wood posts with spools and pierced wood block effect brackets. The porch has a shed roof with a left side pedimented gable with a fan effect over steps. The double front door has a transom with narrow Queen Anne window with colored lights in upper sash. The doors are heavily carved and there is the initial "M" carved on the bottom of each door. The interior single door has a cut glass zinc camed window. There are paired windows to the right and above on second floor, with a single window on left.

South Facade

The south facade has four bays. There is an integral brick chimney with decorative brickwork. The southeast corner has a wooden porch with turned wood columns and decorative woodwork around the shed roof. The middle of the facade has a shallow, L-shaped section with a front gable roof that has decorative wood blocks in the peak and a first floor, hipped roof, bay window. The hipped roof on this elevation has original slate.

East Facade

The east facade has two bays and an integral, decorative brick chimney. The east facade shares the southeast corner porch with south facade

North Facade

The north facade has four bays and an L-shaped middle section with a front gable roof. The peak of the roof has three one over one double-hung sash windows and decorative block woodwork. The first floor has small colored glass window on northwest side.

Interior - First Floor

The first floor has ornately carved, cherry, woodwork throughout. The entrance hall has an interior, beveled glass door. There is a wooden, carved staircase leading to the second floor. In addition, there is a second stairway in the kitchen. In the dining room there is a built in wood cabinet in the closet and an alcove with carved wood trim. Wood pocket doors frame the entrance to the living room. The living room, dining room, and library also contain ornately carved mantels surrounding the fireplace in each room. These rooms also have interior wood shutters.

Interior - Second Floor

The second floor contains five bedrooms and one bathroom. All rooms on this floor have wooden doors and transoms. The floors are hardwood. Over two of the bedroom doors the names of Oliver Marshall's children by his first wife, John and Olive, were etched into the transoms. There is a staircase leading to the finished attic.

Interior - Attic

The attic is finished and has hardwood floors. The attic was used mainly as a playroom for Oliver Marshall's children.

Exterior - Garage/Storage Shed

One bay, wood, garage/storage shed with front gable roof. c. 1955. Noncontributing.

The Marshall House on historic Ridge Avenue was built by West Virginia State Senator Oliver Marshall in 1887. It qualifies under Criterion B because of Marshall's role in government and the political history of West Virginia. The Marshall House also qualifies under Criterion C as an example of late 19th Century Queen Anne architecture. The house has been owned by members of the Marshall family since its construction. The period of significance is 1887-1934 when it was the home of Senator Oliver Marshall.

Historical Significance

The Marshall House was built by West Virginia State Senator Oliver Marshall, a descendant of one of Hancock County's leading families. Oliver Marshall was born in Fairview, now New Manchester, on September 24, 1850. He was the great grandson of the pioneer Aaron Marshall, who came from east of the mountains, from somewhere in Virginia. He is thought to have been a soldier for Braddock and Washington in the famous campaign of 1755. About 1760 he came to what is now Hancock County, WV. His land was part of the Johnson Survey, granted in 1775, when Patrick Henry was governor of Virginia. The grant was for 7,000 acres, but when it was surveyed it measured 8,100 acres. Of this Aaron Marshall was assigned 205 acres at ten shillings an acre, payable in whiskey at five shillings a gallon, flour and other forms of currency of the day. Aaron Marshall had the fourth house on the tract. The original record of title is at Louisville, Kentucky. The town of Newell stands on part of the original grant. In his minutes George Washington mentions the waterfalls where his tract borders the Ohio River, but the land of Aaron Marshall was some five miles northeast from that stream.

Aaron Marshall continued to live on his Hancock County land until his death 1826. He was a Baptist and frequently preached in the Kings Creek area, where he is buried.

Aaron Marshall's son, John, was born in 1782 and died in 1859, spending his entire life in Hancock County. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

John Marshall's son, James G. Marshall, was born at old Fairview, Hancock County on November 21, 1826 and died October 6, 1902. He left the farm, did considerable surveying, became an attorney, and for twenty-four years was the prosecuting attorney of Hancock County. He was buried in the old Presbyterian churchyard at Fairview. His wife was Lavina Miller, daughter of John Miller and granddaughter of David Miller. David Miller settled on Tomlison Run, where he owned 400 acres, secured from Dorsey Pentecost, one of the two last judges who held court at Pittsburgh under the authority of the British crown. David had the first house in Gas Valley, and died in 1835, in his ninety-ninth year. His son, John, spent his life as a farmer at the old place, and his daughter, Lavina was born there. She died when about sixty years old. Her three children are: Oliver S., E.D. Marshall, an attorney at Santa Clara, CA, and Ila, who married Dr. J.W. Walton.

Oliver S. Marshall attended West Liberty Normal School and graduated from Bethany College in 1878. Marshall served as a trustee of that college for many years. From 1880 to 1885 Marshall was principal of the New Cumberland Grade School. In 1884 he was elected the Clerk of the County Court of Hancock County. He held this office until 1896 when he was elected to the West Virginia State Senate from the First Senatorial District. That same year he was admitted to the Hancock County bar. In 1892 Marshall served as a delegate to the Republican National Convention. Marshall served as President of the State Senate for the 1899 session.

During his term as President of the West Virginia Senate, Marshall presided over Senate proceedings that led to the passage of a variety of bills. Some of the issues that were decided by the Senate and the Legislature during Marshall's term as president were incorporation of West Virginia banks and savings institutions, establishing a procedure for West Virginia public institutions to report to the Legislature, and reorganizing the process for the Legislature to consider appropriations bills.

Marshall married Elizabeth Tarr on September 8, 1880. Elizabeth was the daughter of Campbell and Nancy Hammond Tarr. Campbell Tarr was one of the members of the Richmond Convention who withdrew when Virginia passed the ordinance of secession. Subsequently, Tarr became a leader in the West Virginia statehood movement.

In 1887, Oliver Marshall hired an architect named Smith to build a house on Ridge Avenue according to Marshall's specifications. The Queen Anne style home was constructed with bricks made in New Cumberland from local clay. The Marshall/McNeil house is the finest example of Queen Anne style architecture in New Cumberland.

Oliver and Elizabeth Marshall had two children, John and Olive. John graduated from Yale and West Virginia University and later practiced law in Parkersburg. After the death of Elizabeth, Marshall married Nora Householder in 1890. The Marshalls had three children: Edith, Edmond, and Virginia. Oliver Marshall died in 1934 at the age of 66. After his death, Marshall's daughter, Virginia Marshall, lived in the house and taught school in New Cumberland for forty years. She resided in the Marshall house until her death in 1997.

Summary

The Marshall/McNeil House is significant under Criterion B because it was the home of one of New Cumberland's leading politicians, Oliver Marshall. During his lifetime, Marshall served Hancock County as a teacher, lawyer, West Virginia State Senator, and President of the West Virginia Senate. The house was Oliver Marshall's home from the time it was built in 1887 till his death in 1934. The Marshall/McNeil House also qualifies under Criterion C as an excellent example of late 19th Century Queen Anne architecture.
