Summary Paragraph

The Joseph and Margaret Wilkinson House, built in 1903, is a one and one-half story Victorian Eclectic-style cross-wing with lean-to style rear shed bedroom. The house is located at 318 South 800 West in Orem, Utah. The walls are constructed of double and triple deep adobe brick covered by an orange brick exterior layer, all constructed on a dark granite rubble stone foundation. The house has many of the characteristics of the Victorian-Eclectic pioneer houses in the area, including: an asymmetrical facade, decorative darker brick accents and arched window openings. By the turn of the century, increasing economic prosperity allowed settlers to transition from unadorned vernacular houses to more stylish Victorian homes, and the Wilkinson house is a good example of the transition. The house is located on a small parcel with deciduous trees and lawn, with driveway access to the rear yard. The neighborhood is a residential with a smaller lots and architecture from various eras, but primarily the mid-to-late twentieth century. Although the house has been recently remodeled, the Wilkinson house retains much of its historic integrity.

Narrative Description

Exterior

The primary façade of the Joseph and Margaret Wilkinson House faces east and retains its historical appearance. The rubble stone foundation, composed of dark granite quarried in nearby Provo Canyon, is in excellent condition with very minor mortar patching. The brick is also in good condition, with some loss of mortar and minor settling from water leakage around the windows. Many of the bricks have writing from the original occupants of the house. The original owner and children apparently wrote notes and recorded transactions on the bricks and much of that writing is still visible. The Wilkinson house has dark colored brick quoins, arched window openings and horizontal banding between floors, which is unusual among houses in the area. The quoining brick color was painted onto the bricks, which has resulted in some staining around the colored brick. All of the fascia boards around the roof are original painted wood and in reasonable condition. The roof line has not been altered, but the original roof was skip-sheathed and may have been composed of wood shingles. The roof of the main house and historic porch are currently covered with asphalt shingles. The original chimney is visible, and has several bricks missing.

The front façade has a large window with a fixed wood sash centered on the house parlor directly under the primary gable. The main window is a replacement for the original three-panel fixed wood sash window with a movable transom window above. A second window is centered in the gable end above the main façade window and is also a replacement for a double hung wood sash original window. Both window openings retain their original wood block sill, decorative quoin brickwork and carved wood panel under the window arch.

The front porch, which was added to the house in 1925, has a concrete floor as well as a concrete knee wall. The knee wall serves as a base for the posts which are dimensional lumber. The roof of the porch is a shed roof which has the original skip sheathing visible on the underside. The porch extends three feet beyond the northeast corner of the house allowing access to the north side of the house. The porch contains two doors and a single window. The south door, which directly entered the parlor, has been made into a shallow set of shelves, and the interior of the door is not visible from within the house. The front door of the residence is not original, but still contains the original fixed transom window above the door. The double hung window to the right of the front door is also not original, but like most of the other windows, a 1960s housing authority replacement with storm window covering on a metal track.¹

The north façade of the house has three windows, two on the main floor and one in the gable end. The wood sash windows have all been covered with aluminum sash storm windows. There are two small areas in the brickwork on the north façade where vents have been installed and removed over the years which have mismatched colored mortar.

The west façade, in the back of the house, has one window in the lean-to portion of the house, which is now a bathroom and laundry room. The window is a fixed sash wood frame window with storm window covering, similar to those along the north façade. The back door, which opens into the kitchen, is offset to the north side of the gable end. The five-panel back door has a storm door over the original house front door, which has original glazing, decorative sill and hardware. The triple deep adobe brick rear wall construction is apparent in the depth of the door opening. The transom window has been covered, although the decorative arched header boards remain intact. The second story contains a doorway, which may have been intended to allow access directly to the rooms on the partial second story. The entry was never completed, nor is there evidence of a porch covering, except for anchor holes on the concrete steps, which appear to be contemporary with the 1925 front porch. The upper door opening has been converted into a full length window opening along the interior staircase. There is some deterioration in some mortar joints along this wall, which appears to be caused by interior or exterior moisture flow.

The south façade has two replacement windows identical in size to the north side of the house. The west window opens into the kitchen and east window into the parlor. The wooden sills and arched decorative header boards above each window are in good condition. The mortar shows wear and slight cracking along the edges of the header, but is otherwise in good condition.

Interior

The interior of the Joseph Wilkinson house has 846 square feet of space on the main floor and 500 square feet on the second floor. The floor plan is common among early Utah homes, with a main hall on the north side and smaller parlor on the south side of the front façade and kitchen and smaller room along the rear façade. The layout of the main floor rooms has changed from its original configuration, but primarily with the historical addition of plumbing and conversion of the shed addition into a bath and washroom. Some doorways have been moved, opened and closed in over time.² Additionally, the staircase has been modified to an “L” shape and lengthened.

Much of the interior has been renovated, and little remains of the pine plank flooring and original plaster walls, which have been covered. Each interior and exterior doorway in the house was originally constructed with a small fixed transom window. Four of the transom windows still exist. The kitchen and bath have also been renovated, with only an elegant O'Keefe Merritt gas stove remaining of the original fixtures.

The second floor has been extensively remodeled from the original cardboard and wallpaper walls Margaret Wilkinson installed in the early twentieth century in order to reinforce and insulate existing roof trusses and add forced air heating.

Setting

The Wilkinson house sits on a small .124 acre parcel, which is all that remains of the original 40-acre parcel. Immediately behind the house is the 16 parcel Westhill Plat F residential subdivision, developed by the descendants of Margaret and Rose Wilkinson in 2003. There are no outbuildings located on the property and the landscaping consists of a large maple tree in front and a few very small fruit trees in the rear yard. The surrounding area is now residential rather than agricultural with most of the houses being built after 1942.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Joseph and Margaret Wilkinson House, constructed in 1903, is significant under Criteria A and C. Under criterion A it is locally significant under the area of agriculture for its association with the "Settlement and Agricultural Expansion: Mid-1870s-1913" and the "Establishment of Orem: 1914-1941" categories of the Historic and Architectural Resources of Orem, Utah, Multiple Property Submission. The early establishment and growth of Orem was based on agriculture, particularly fruit orchards and farms. The original owner of the house, Joseph Wilkinson, was raised on a farm in East Millcreek, Salt Lake County, but followed his mother when she moved to Utah County and established a family farm on Provo Bench (as Orem was originally known) in 1900. Like most early settlers of Orem, Joseph became involved in the fruit-growing industry and had cherry and apple orchards, along with raspberry and dewberry fields, among many other crops. The Wilkinson House is a fine representative example of the home of a successful farmer and fruit grower in Orem during a period of agricultural expansion and prosperity in the early 1900s. The house is also significant under criteria C as an excellent example of Victorian architecture in Orem. Early houses in the community were quite utilitarian, but as the agricultural economy flourished, national stylistic trends such as Victorianism influenced local architecture to a degree. Constructed of brick, the house features original stained-brick trim detailing, and is the only known example of this in the area. Placed in the context of a primarily agricultural landscape with fairly modest architecture, the Wilkinson House reflects the waning Victorian influence, though on a modest scale compared to larger, more-established urban areas, as was typical of the fledgling farming community. The house retains its architectural integrity and is an important contributing resource in a city that has lost many historic buildings and farmland to heavy building development in the last twenty years.^{3 4}

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Historical Context

The "Agricultural Expansion" period from the mid-1870s-1913 was one of the greatest growth periods in the early days of the Provo Bench. Prior to the creation of a canal irrigation system, seasonal landholders would attempt to raise crops on the bench, but could not live there because there was little water. The construction of the Provo Bench Canal in 1864 and opening of a federal land office in 1869 allowed more people to settle in the area and subsequent expansion of irrigation ditches and canals allowed for greater farm production. Fruit trees were found to be the best cash producing crops, and by the turn of the century those who had become involved in raising fruit started to realize great success which, in turn, encouraged others to move here and raise fruit orchards and farm.⁵

During the "Establishment of Orem" period from 1914-1941, Provo Bench saw more changes associated with growth than in the previous periods. After local mining markets collapsed during first decade of the 20th century, fruit growers on the bench realized that if their prosperity was to continue they must market their produce outside of the area and outside of Utah. In 1913, the "Orem Line" of the Salt Lake and Utah Railroad was opened, and with the increasing popularity of the automobile, fruit and produce growers were able to market their products all over the western United States. Provo Bench soon became Orem Town in 1919 (in honor of Walter Orem who brought the railroad to the area).

Under Criterion A, the Wilkinson family house is significant for its close association with the "Agricultural Expansion" and later "Establishment of Orem" periods outlined in the Historic and Architectural Resources of Orem, Utah multiple property listing. As a farmer and fruit grower, Joseph Wilkinson clearly exemplified the successful development and prosperity of agriculture in Provo Bench and Orem from his arrival in 1900 through 1944.

Historical Significance

The land on which the Wilkinson house sits was part of a 40-acre parcel patented to Joseph Wilkinson's mother, Mary Bircumshaw Wilkinson in 1908. The parcel was originally part of a school section in the Provo Bench federal land survey, and was offered for settlement patent by the State of Utah after 1900, thirty years after original federal land became available. In 1903, twenty five year-old Joseph and his brother John began to make improvements on this piece of land which his mother had filed a homestead claim.⁶

Joseph's mother, Mary Ellen Bircumshaw, was a native of Nottingham, England, born in 1851, who immigrated to Utah in 1864 as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In 1869, she became the second wife of polygamist Moses Wilkinson in Salt Lake City. Both Wilkinson families lived in the East Millcreek area of Salt Lake City.⁷ Mary Ellen raised eight children partially alone, especially after 1887 federal anti-polygamy legislation caused Moses to serve a prison term at the federal penitentiary in 1890.⁸

After Moses died in January 1899, Mary, her second and third oldest sons John and Joseph, as well as her four younger children followed her oldest son Alma Wilkinson to Utah County and moved to a 10-acre parcel on Provo Bench that Mary had purchased in 1898 from Lars Jensen.⁹ In January 1899, she married Thomas Barrett, a widowed original settler and local farmer. The marriage did not last long, however, and Mrs. Wilkinson resumed her former married name by 1900. In 1903, the family made a claim to the school trust land and moved to their 40-acre parcel on Provo Bench, with Mary residing with his unmarried brother John until her death in 1915.

Joseph Albert Wilkinson was born in Hoytsville, Summit County, Utah, on April 19, 1878. He was the third son and fourth of eight children born to Mary and Moses Wilkinson. The Mary Wilkinson family resided on a farm in East Millcreek, in the Salt Lake Valley, until Joseph was 20 years old, when the family moved to Provo Bench. Initially, Joseph lived with his mother Mary, older brother John and younger siblings on the property she had purchased from Lars Jensen in 1898. In 1903, Joseph began improving the school lands parcel his mother homesteaded by planting trees and also starting construction on the house in which he and his family would reside until his death. In 1904, Joseph met Margaret Gillies from nearby Vineyard. Margaret was the only daughter and third of six children born on November 14, 1882, to local farmer Hyrum Gillies and his wife Jessie Archibald Gillies. Joseph married Margaret Gillies in Vineyard on February 21, 1905.

After the marriage, the newlyweds occupied the newly completed first two rooms of the Wilkinson House. Together they would raise ten children, four girls and six boys. All but two of the children were born in the front parlor of the house. Although the family was not wealthy, Joseph had constructed a simple but somewhat stylish Victorian house, with painted brick quoins and arched windows. As the children grew older, it became necessary to finish and divide the upstairs, and a short steep staircase was installed on the west side of the kitchen as well as a doorway which might have been intended for a future addition.

Joseph had a strong sense of duty to his family, and his daughter Rose recalled her mother chastising her father for taking better care of his mother and siblings than his own family. Shortly before her death in 1915, Mary transferred 30 acres to Joseph and left the remaining 20 acres to his unmarried brother John. Joseph Wilkinson spent 48 years farming the land, which was west of the house. He grew cherries, apples, raspberries, dewberries among many other crops.¹⁰

Joseph transferred title to his wife Margaret in 1930, and they lived in the house until his death on October 19, 1944. Margaret continued to live in the house until passing away at the age of 82 on July 3, 1964, and transferred title to the house and one-half acre of property to her daughter Rose in 1947. Rose lived in the house into her nineties, when she moved into a nursing home in Provo. The property was further subdivided and all remaining historical farm property developed into residential housing in 2003, when the current boundary was adopted. None of the orchard or farm character remains, as continued suburban housing development from the 1940s through today has significantly transformed the entire city from once mostly fruit orchards to primarily residential use.

The historical significance of the Wilkinson House under agriculture is relative to Joseph's lifelong involvement in raising a variety of different kinds of fruit in a community that was settled and flourished because of the unique characteristics of the geography and climate that resulted in a productive growing environment. Joseph lived and farmed in Orem during the pinnacle of the city's agricultural development before commercial and residential development became more viable and displaced the majority of farmland in the city. His house is the only remnant of his successful farm venture.

Architectural Significance

Under Criterion C, the Wilkinson house is architecturally significant as a unique example of the transition between classical and Victorian architectural forms and styles on the Provo Bench in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Although architecturally subdued, Victorian influence in the architectural details is apparent in the cross-wing plan, arched window openings, and stained brick around the fenestration. The rural early volatility of farming on the Provo Bench caused early residents to struggle to make a steady income and created a dispersed population of farmsteads of primarily small, vernacular classically styled houses. However, as fruit growing income increased, those who saw success in their farms began to build or alter their homes in Victorian styles, mainly incorporating Victorian Eclectic details such as asymmetrical facades, bay windows, arched window and door openings, decorative brickwork and leaded-glass windows.

The Wilkinson House combines a transitional house type with many of the Victorian Eclectic features common on Provo Bench and in Utah from 1885 through 1910. After 1880, the cross-wing house replaced the hall-parlor as the most common Utah house type.¹¹ Although the cross-wing was initially associated in Utah with altered classical styles, it soon became very popular in smaller Victorian styled forms which were popular in Utah from 1885 through 1915. The pattern-book styles and standardized building components were available and easily adapted for use with local materials. The quality of design and workmanship were also improved during the Victorian era.¹² Including this house, there are only seven remaining examples of Victorian Eclectic cross-wing houses in Orem, all built from 1896 through 1909.

The decorative dark painted brick quoins on the Wilkinson House are unique in Provo Bench/Orem architecture. Although Joseph Wilkinson wanted to create a Victorian house, he had limited resources, both financially and in available local construction materials. To create the illusion of differentiated brickwork around the fenestration and corners, he used locally produced orange-colored bricks which were then hand-painted dark red after being kiln-fired. Those painted bricks remain visible today, with some staining on mortar joints and adjacent bricks attesting to their hand painted origin. There are no other houses known in the city or surrounding area with this type of detailing. Although there is no record, the inspiration for this brickwork may possibly be found on two other examples of brick painting in the nearby mining town of Eureka, Utah, which was booming during the Provo Bench Victorian Eclectic building era and was the principal market for fruit and vegetables produced in Provo Bench.

Submit clear and descriptive photographs. The size of each image must be 1600x1200 pixels (minimum), 3000x2000 preferred, at 300 ppi (pixels per inch) or larger. Key all photographs to the sketch map. Each photograph must be numbered and that number must correspond to the photograph number on the photo log. For simplicity, the name of the photographer, photo date, etc. may be listed once on the photograph log and doesn't need to be labeled on every photograph.
