John I. Morrison (1806-1882) who used the Hay-Morrison House for his grammar school in its earliest years, remained identified with Salem until his death. For a number of years he taught in and was principal of the Washington County Seminary after which he taught for many years in the Salem academy. Students came to Salem from all sections of Indiana and neighboring states to study under Morrison. Numerous of them entered colleges, some of them became college professors, one became a college president and an early superintendent of public instruction for the State of Indiana.

Morrison's interests and contributions were varied. A member of the convention which drafted Indiana's constitution of 1851, he was chairman of its committee on education in which capacity he staunchly and effectively supported efforts on behalf of both common schools and Indiana University. Morrison later served three terms on the Indiana University Board of Trustees. Long interested in the education of women, Morrison's daughter, Sarah, became the first woman to enroll at Indiana University as a regular college student, and later became its first woman graduate.

John Hay (1838-1905) was born in the Hay-Morrison House. He lived here until his family moved to Illinois in the 1840's. Hay studied at Brown University, from which he received the A.M. degree. During the Civil War he served as a secretary to President Lincoln. In collaboration with J. G. Nicolay he later collected and edited the papers of President Lincoln in ten volumes known as Abraham Lincoln: A History (New York, 1890). For a time Hay also served as an editor for the New York Tribune.

After the Civil War, Hay served his country in diplomatic assignments at Vienna, Madrid, and Paris. He served briefly as ambassador to England before serving both Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt as Secretary of State. Commonly ranked among the six most effective secretaries of state, he exercised a decisive role in obtaining exclusive American rights for the building of the Panama Canal without loss of friendly understanding with England, then the leading world power. He likewise exercised the major role in establishing the Open Door Policy which did so much to halt the division of China into spheres of influence under European powers and preserved much Chinese control over Chinese affairs.

The Hay-Morrison House has a Federal Architectural design, prevalent in this community in an early day and was built from bricks produced in a local brickyard. Its simple lines created a style that was to remain as a design of small school buildings for many years in the area.
