Section number 7 Page 1

DESCRIPTION

The Robert Moreton/William Crawford House is a one-and-a-half-story, frame, irregularly-massed, hipped and multiple-gabled roof "cottage" in the Queen Anne/Free Classic style. The house faces west, on the northeast corner of the intersection of South Jackson and Warren (originally Beech) streets. (See Photo #1.) The landscaping on the lot features mature yard and street trees, concrete walks and driveways, and designed planting beds and garden areas. The house and yard are integral parts of the early 20th century identity of the established South Jackson Street neighborhood.

The home's facade is dominated by its steeply-pitched, irregular roof line and a wrap porch that extends from a screened area on the north elevation across the west elevation and continues on the south elevation, ending at the projecting bay in the dining room. Facade elements are, from north, screened porch, polygonal bay, door with entry surround, bay. Porch supports are wooden Tuscan columns, flooring is tongue-and-groove wood, balustrades have milled rails and turned balusters. The wide, wooden steps on the main and south elevations have reeded square, chamfered, molded newel posts.

A pedimented, heavily-molded gable on the porch roof defines the entry. This gable and all major roof ridges are capped with ridge tile which end with finials at gable peaks. Above the porch, unmatched, gabled dormers have molded fascia and cornice boards. A molded frieze which is broken under gable areas runs under the main roof line. Dormer windows in the upper story are multi-paned over one-light, with the multiple panes arranged in the distinctive "star" or "flag" pattern favored in many early 20th century houses with classical features.

The main (western) entry has a leaded-glass, single-leafed, wooden door with multiple curvilinear bevelled lights in a "frame" of rectangular bevelled lights and a diamond-paned leaded transom. The surround has edge boards and a deep, molded cornice on the architrave. (See Photo #2.) The secondary (southern) entry is a single-leafed wooden door with colored Queen Anne lights under a stained-glass transom. (See Photo #3.) Siding is narrow, bevelled, novelty board. Exterior wooden shutters are original and operational. Four corbelled-top chimneys pierce the roof. The foundation is brick piers with brick infill.

The minimal alterations to the exterior of the house include the replacement of deteriorated dormer windows with exact replicas and the enclosure of the back porch with glass, lattice work, and low walls sided to match the house. (See Photo #4.)

DESCRIPTION, CONTINUED

Interior fittings are also almost entirely original, including tongue-and-groove pine floors, closed-string two-flight staircase with original newels, railing and spindles. (See Photo # 5), original door and window surrounds (including classical paneling under most first-story windows), original tile surrounds for the six Colonial Revival hardwood mantels apparently specified in the architect's plans, and original ceiling details, which include 12-foot height and plasterwork cornices and central medallions in formal downstairs rooms. (See Photo # 6.) The fireplace in the wide central rear hall has been altered from its original coal-burning configuration to allow for wood-burning. This mantel and the three others in the main public rooms have classical detailing in columns and molded panels. Tile work on the bedroom fire grate surrounds has been painted and mantels are simpler, without overmantels. Some of the mantles are signed on the backs by local workmen.

To the rear of the house, the original one-and-a-half story frame carriage house survives with ground floor alterations on the west and south that enclose it for use as a garage. (See Photo # 7.) The main roof of the building is side-gabled, with a centered, front-gabled dormer set into the western elevation, which faces the rear of the house. A tongue-and-groove door is centered under the dormer gable in a "jettied" bay above the painted metal garage doors. Dormer and main gables are boxed and have simple fascia and cornice molding. Original openings on the west were double wooden plank doors to the left and spaced, vertical 1" by 3" boards for stable ventilation at the right. Doors into horse stalls and a tack room were located in similar space vertical-board siding on the south elevation.

Family records show that Capt. J.M. Tedford, a respected local builder, was the contractor. Among Mr. Tedford's projects was the First Presbyterian Church at the corner of South Jackson and Chickasaw streets. Family history says that Mr. Ben Edwards served as plumber for the project and Mr. Ed Pepper was a finish carpenter.

SIGNIFICANCE

The Moreton/Crawford House, still owned by descendants of the original owner, is significant as a fine example of Queen Anne/Free Classic architecture in Brookhaven and as a documented example of the designs of George F. Barber, architect and architectural plan-book author from the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The integrity of the house is confirmed by the original blueprints "For A.E. Moreton," signed by George F. Barber, which are held by the present owners, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Crawford.

Architectural details which place the house in the popular early 20th century Queen Anne/Free Classic style include classical columns, door, window and interior woodwork elements combined with the irregular massing and roof design common to examples of the Queen Anne Cottage form. For example, although dormers follow in shape and irregularity the Queen Anne style, they are here sided with narrow, rounded novelty-board and have the boxed eaves, simple fascia, and cornice molding common to classically-derived styles like Colonial Revival. Similarly, the polygonal bays, common to both late Victorian and early 20th century classical styles, here feature windows alternatively in ornate, leaded-glass Queen Anne style and multiple-paned Neo-Classical style.

The interior of the house retains its "Southern Yellow Pine throughout," as specified on the blueprints. Materials were chosen and milled at The Pearl River Lumber Company, of which Captain Moreton was an organizer. The pine serves as both structural and decorative material. Original tongue-and-groove flooring survives, for example, as do door and window surrounds with edge boards, and bevelled panel insets under deep 1/1 double-hung facade windows. Interior wood trim such as mantels and the newel post for the closed-string, two-flight staircase are oak and mahogany, apparently mail-ordered in typically classical styles according to the architect's specifications. Deep baseboards with complex details are single, milled boards. The house has been well maintained by the Crawfords and their predecessors. The only significant changes which have been made are the enclosure of the formerly open rear porch and the careful re-production of decayed dormer windows in their original proportion and style.

Barber opined in his introduction to The Cottage Souvenir (No. 2) that architecture is similar to music in its requirement for harmony, time, proportion, and expression. "The musician who can arrange the musical octave upon the staff in the best relation for the most perfect harmony, has succeeded in producing the sweetest and most exquisite music. The designer, likewise, who can arrange lines in the most perfect manner... has succeeded in producing the finest and most perfect object in his class of studies -- a

SIGNIFICANCE, CONTINUED

Mississippi houses attributed to George Barber have been identified in Hazlehurst, Holly Springs, Corinth, Brookhaven, and Hattiesburg. References have been found to plans drawn for houses in Booneville, Magnolia, McComb, and Moss Point. Five of these houses are listed on the National Register of Historic Places, two as individual listings, and three within National Register Historic Districts. The individual listings are both on South Extension Street in Hazlehurst: the I.N. Ellis House, at 258, and the Robert L. Covington House at 240. Listed within districts are: the John A. McLeod House, 802 Main Street, Hattiesburg; the Dr. T.E. Ross House, 416 Bay Street, Hattiesburg; and the Judge L.A. Smith House, at 504 Salem Ave., Holly Springs.

Research on George Barber being done by Michael Alcorn, AIA, professor at the University of Nevada at Las Vegas, located office file records of seven Mississippi houses -- the McLeod house in Hattiesburg, two homes in Booneville (one for W.H. Rees, one for Mary E. Nash), a home for R.P. Willings in Hazlehurst, the "Lampton Residence" in Magnolia, the "Dweyer Residence" in McComb, and an unnamed house in Moss Point. The total number of Barber houses in the state and their relative significance will not be known until a complete accounting of resources is made. Mr. William F. Crawford, owner of the Moreton-Crawford house, knows of four Barber houses in Brookhaven. All were built by A.E. Moreton for his sons. All of them have survived, but only two remain in the family. The McLeod, Ellis, Moreton, and Smith houses are listed among notable examples of "Victorian Queen Anne Architecture in Mississippi," in an article by Richard J. Cawthon of the Division of Historic Preservation.

Comments on local events in The Brookhaven Leader on January 11, 1905 include the following: "R.D. Moreton's commodious and handsome cottage, just south of Claude Bowen's will be an ornament to that part of town and a credit to the contractor." On Wednesday, September 2 of the same year, The Leader comments on Captain Moreton that "No man among us has done more to adorn our city with beautiful homes...than has Captain Moreton through his children."
