The older frame section of the house consists of one room per floor. Downstairs, the large beams are exposed as are the gunstock beam in the corners. At one time, they were covered by plaster, but were discovered when the house underwent restoration during the 1950's. The large kitchen fireplace with bake oven is intact, although the hearth has been rebuilt with custom made bricks designed to duplicate the original large bricks.

The 1725 section is of Flemish bond brick with glazed headers and has two square dormers and a gambrel roof. The first floor of this section is four risers above the older wing. There are several original doors, including a double plank batten door to the exterior. The original paneling has been removed, but it has been replaced by early 18th century paneling taken from a neighboring house. The original newel post and railing are intact. Both sections still have much of the original hardware including strap hinges on all doors and wrought iron thumb latches.

Alterations to the house include converting the original stairway in the older section into a closet, raising the first floor level of the older section two feet (done because originally the house had dirt floors), rebuilding the kitchen fireplace, and adding a large addition to the rear. This addition contains the modern kitchen, a utility room, bathroom, and bedroom.

Although the date of construction and the builder of the original section cannot be verified, documentary evidence proves that this section existed when Maskel purchased the land in 1703. Edwin Brumbaugh, a restoration architect who worked on the house, feels that existing details and structural features all indicate a 17th century house. The 1725 date of the brick section is verified in records pertaining to Maskel.

Most of the alterations, both to the two early wings and to the recent addition, have been undertaken during recent years. Under the supervision of Mr. Brumbaugh, the Erbaughs have undertaken part of the restoration of the house. The previous owners, the Gerald Church's, also undertook some restoration activities with the assistance of Mr. Gerald Watland, another restoration architect.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SETTLEMENT

Thomas Maskell bought the land on which this house stood in 1703 from Edward Shaw. The will of Thomas Maskell of Cohansey, Salem County, dated October 22, 1732 left the house to his wife Mary and his personal property to his children and grandchildren. Thomas Maskell, his son, was appointed sheriff by Governor Franklin.

A grandson, Maskell, mentioned in his grandfather's will, inherited the house from his grandmother. He was the first child of Mary Maskell and Thomas Ewing who was originally from Londonderry, Ireland. Thomas and Mary were the parents of ten children, two of whom, James and Thomas Ewing, were among the tea burners of Greenwich. The tea burning in Cumberland County was New Jersey's protest of the high tax on tea.

Maskell Ewing, in a will dated 1790, left the property to his son. The son, in turn, sold the property out of the family to Jonathon Doan in 1800.

At one time during the 1800's this farm was called the Vauxhill Gardens, probably from the Vauxhill Public Gardens in Philadelphia.
