STATEMENT

The Ockershausen House is an unusual example of Davenport's residential architecture that reflects the transition from the popular pre-1900 Queen Anne to post-1900 Colonial Revival, verticality in form & siting are holdovers from the former with individual building elements suggesting the latter style. This picturesque turn of the century house profits from an imposing site on which the observer's eye is drawn naturally upward, the movement reinforced by and culminating in the large wall dormer at center front. The soffits of the dormer's steeply-pitched gable roof are curved inward to meet partially-returned cornices. A large Adam-style oval window is another noteworthy feature, as is the front door with its tall glass oval. The porch with a rockfaced stone foundation and wall, is unexceptional except for the statues of lions on pedestals near the base of the steps.
