DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) Physical Appearance

The Old Post Office in Cumberland (1902-1904) is an excellent example of Georgian Revival as designed by a "creative eclectic," James K. Taylor, Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury from 1897 to 1912. Rather than the Georgian, or more correctly, Colonial Revival, as practiced by other architects relying on American examples, the Old Post Office is perhaps closer to the original eighteenth-century English models (City Hall in York, for example). An American version of an English neo-Palladian building, the source for the Old Post Office could probably be easily found in the same architectural pattern books--those by British architects like James Gibbs and Colon Campbell--which inspired eighteenth-century American houses like Mount Airy (Richmond County, Virginia, c. 1765, and innumerable other Maryland and Virginia examples), as well as public buildings like those by Peter Harrison (the Market House, Newport, Rhode Island, c. 1761).

Similar to the central block of a five-part "country house" (Tryon Palace in New Bern, North Carolina, a reconstruction, is a good example of this), the Old Post Office is a simple, three-story rectangular block. The upper two stories are brick raised from a monumental stone base. The three center bays of the symmetrical, five-part facade are defined by four engaged Ionic (Roman) columns, on the second and third levels, and form a pavilion which is topped by a full entablature and a pediment complete with bull's-eye window. This pavilion is quoined as are the corners of the main block. There are rusticated surrounds on each main doorway; splayed lintels, or full entablature (on the pavilion windows); window balustrades (on second level windows); and a roof balustrade.

Somewhat similar in style, materials, etc., to the post office by the same architect in Annapolis, the Old Post Office is indicative of a period when the Federal Government took some care and expense in the design and construction of its buildings. The Old Post Office's exterior integrity should be maintained (and perhaps cleaned) for its attractive and dignified appearance make a stabilizing focal point in this part of downtown Cumberland.

Construction began in 1902 after the Maryland legislature had permitted the United States to purchase land in Cumberland and after Congress raised the maximum cost limit from $75,000 to $125,000. Opened in mid-1904 the building was the sixth location of the Cumberland post office department since the first one which was opened in a log building in 1795.
