19. Architectural significance

🔀 a. Key structure/individually may qualify for the National Register

b. Contributing structure

c. Not eligible/intrusion

The Sigourney Public Library is a highly interesting amalgamation of bungaloid rusticity and understated Georgian propriety. The hisped roof covering the body of the building terminates in eaves studded with bared rafters. These project far enough to hide the tops of the windows. The center pavilion features a round-arched doorway framed with a modified Gibbs surround and an open pediment with an intricately molded, denticular cornice. The only unexpected feature of the plan, which conforms to Type I is the location of the fireplace at center rear behind the librarian's desk.
