DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Daughters' College is located at 638 Beaumont Drive adjacent to a residential section of south Harrodsburg, Kentucky. About one-quarter of a mile to the west is U.S. 127, a major north-south transportation artery through town. Harrodsburg has a population of 6,741 (1970 census) and is the seat of government for agricultural Mercer County, situated in the central Bluegrass region.

Constructed ca.1851, Daughters' College is a five-bay, three-story, brick Greek Revival structure. A two-story portico consisting of six Ionic columns supporting a plain entablature softens the severity of the massive, rectangular block. Brickwork is common bond and jack arches are employed above the 6/6 window openings. Numerous chimneys rise above the low hipped roof. A long one-story brick ell on the rear of the main block adjoins a two-story structure now serving as the kitchen. The gift shop and dining rooms are currently located in the ell. A two-story brick and frame wing extends westward from the ell. All portions of the complex are now used in connection with the operation of the inn and are contemporary with the main building.

Interior woodwork consists of plain and shouldered architrave door and window trim, simple Greek mantles, and a deep baseboard with elaborate profile. The central hall gives access to double parlors on the south side and the office and registration area on the north. A wide transverse hall runs the width of the building and two flights of stairs are located in this hall where it intersects the central hall. The central hall leads to a porch on the rear of the structure. The building contains seventeen guest rooms; eight on the second and third floors and one on the first floor.

The nominated property, approximately two acres upon which the building is centered, has been established so as to encompass the semi-rural environment of the site.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

ca. 1851

The late Greek Revival structure which has functioned for the past sixty years as Beaumont Inn, a popular hotel and restaurant, achieved its greatest distinction in the second half of the nineteenth century as Daughters' College, one of the leading female colleges of the South. The school gained a reputation for academic excellence at a time when the majority of Kentucky's numerous female "colleges" only offered their pupils at best secondary level courses of instruction. Students from throughout the South were attracted to the institution, and approximately one-third of the graduates later entered the teaching profession. Thus, Daughters' College was one of Kentucky's few nineteenth century schools of higher education that gained regional renown by providing women with a college education equivalent to that offered in contemporary men's schools.

Dr. C.E. Williams and his son, John Augustus Williams, purchased the grounds of the former Greenville Springs, later Greenville Institute, near Harrodsburg in 1856. In that same year, the younger Williams established Daughters' College and served as its president until 1892 when his retirement brought about the closing of the school. The distinction Daughters' College attained has been attributed solely to John Augustus Williams' dedication to education and the teaching profession. Williams graduated from Bacon College in Harrodsburg in 1843 at the age of nineteen. Bacon College functioned under the auspices of the Christian church, and Williams served as a minister in the church before turning to the teaching profession. He helped establish Christian College for women in Columbia, Missouri, in 1851 and served as its first president until he decided to return to Kentucky in 1856. His popularity as a teacher was attested to by the fact that about fifty of his former students followed him from Missouri to Kentucky.

During most of the nineteenth century, Kentucky had no organized system of higher education or state supported schools, although such a program had been conceived in the early years of the state's history. As a result, a proliferation of denominational schools were formed by 1850, and as the second half of the century progressed, these various schools were forced to compete with each other for patronage which led to a general decline in the overall quality of education in the state. In addition, the period from 1850 to 1870 witnessed the establishment of an overwhelming number of female colleges; however, most of these did not offer the college level courses found in the men's schools of the day. 3

Thus, Daughters' College was unusual for the time in that it offered women an academically oriented curriculum consisting of courses in philosophy, English language and literature, mathematics, natural science, history, ancient and modern languages, a school of Bible study, and a school of fine arts. Furthermore, shortly after its founding a normal school was added to the established courses, and Daughters' College became noted for the substantial number of successful teachers it produced. The school attracted a qualified faculty and prospered almost without interruption throughout its existence.<sup>4</sup>

After John Augustus Williams' retirement, the school reopened in 1894 as Beaumont College under the direction of Colonel Thomas Smith, a graduate of the University of Virginia and a former professor at Georgetown College of Kentucky. Smith's goal was to maintain the high academic standards of Daughters' College by expanding the curriculum, continuing to employ a strong faculty, and establishing a department of music. However, like Daughters' College, Beaumont College was a small, individual enterprise lacking the endowment needed for significant expansion, and the school eventually ceased in 1916. The following year, two graduates of Daughters' College purchased the property. By 1919, Mrs. Annie Goddard had bought out her partner, and Mrs. Goddard and her husband opened the Beaumont Inn. The inn is still owned and operated by descendants of Mrs. Goddard.
