Bradley First Lutheran Church is typical of the churches that were built on the prairies of South Dakota in early 1880-1920s. It is located in Lily, South Dakota on a plot of 2 acres of land including the cemetery. The church was built in 1914. It is a wood frame building with a tall bell tower and steeple, centered on the front of the church on a raised, poured concrete foundation with stucco skim coat. Sanctuary and apse roofs are gabled and covered with composition shingles. The building has closed soffits and eave returns at gable ends. The walls feature broad trim boards at top and base of wall.

Exterior

The facade elevation features a tall centered bell tower with a steeple and a front-gable. The main entrance is centered on the bell tower. The bell tower projects approximately five feet from the primary façade of the building, which is square and in three sections. The spire has a concave roof slopes. The belfry section features paneled and capped corner pilasters with a single, round arch opening on each face. Below the belfry is an enclosed oval window directly above a pair of pointed arch gothic stained glass windows. The main entrance is slightly raised from the ground, the entrance features a five panel double doors with a large tracery transom window.

The east and west elevations has four equal sizes pointed arch gothic style stained glass windows. The elevations also feature a smaller pointed arch gothic window, which is located in the one story hip roof area. This hip roof area also includes an entrance. Four steps provide access to the building.

The rear elevation of the sanctuary features a gable roof with section that has gable returns and a small chimney. A pointed arch gothic window is located on the west elevation and the east elevation.

Interior:

The building has a simple rectangular floor plan; it is organized with a north-facing main entrance leading to the sanctuary. The apse at the south end still features the original baptismal font and altar. All of the interior woodwork remains, as well as a balcony at the back of the worship area. The ceiling and walls are covered with tongue and groove wainscoting. The first feet of the wainscoting is vertical, the remaining wood is horizontal.

The altar is centered on the south wall and has a raised stage area with a one step rise. The pulpit is covered with dark stained wainscoting. The pulpit is accessed from a staircase on the left side of the pulpit. Pews are located with a center-aisle with rows flush against the walls.

A cemetery is located on the property with the oldest plot dating to 1911. The latest interment dates from 2000.

Statement of Significance

The Bradley 1st Lutheran Church is eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places under criterion C as embodying the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction. More specifically, the Bradley Church typifies the "first generation" of church construction in eastern South Dakota and has local architectural significance. It typifies the religious buildings common to most permanent rural settlements in South Dakota.

The Bradley church is a center-steeple church, one of the most common types built. The facade of this type of church relies on several center-oriented devices: the steps and porch, entry doors, window in the tower, belfry, and spire are all visually layered over each other. The placements of the openings are symmetrical, and the rest of the building is modestly ornamented.

Historic background

South Dakota and the northern Great Plains in general, suffered heavily during the 1890s. A multi-year drought beginning in 1886, devastated the rural community. This situation was worsened by the national depression that followed the Silver Panic of 1893. Consequently, few church buildings were constructed until the return of relative prosperity at the turn-of -the-century. The period from 1900-1917, known as the Second Dakota Boom, found many eastern South Dakota churches facing an expanding membership and aging, inadequate church buildings. Many congregations decided to construct new church buildings to replace their original first generation structures. These "second generation" structures were usually architect. The exterior covering was often masonry rendered in one of the popular ecclesiastic styles of the time. Despite the relative prosperity of the first two decades of this century, few eastern South Dakota churches could afford extravagant buildings. As a result, second generation churches tended to exhibit less expensive materials and construction techniques than those employed in more prosperous areas of the country.

The Bradley 1st Lutheran Church building fits into the timeframe of second generation church, however it reflects more aspects of a first generation church. First generation churches were simple frame buildings constructed by local carpenters or builders. In eastern South Dakota, first generation churches date from the late 19th century.

The first recorded service for the Bradley Church was on January 23, 1901 at the Karlson School House. Adoption of the church constitution took place on February 25, 1901. Fund raising began almost immediately for a church building. Construction began on the structure in 1911 by Hans Olson. In June 1912, a storm destroyed the building. Hans Olson began again on the church and completed the building in 1914. Although a bell tower exists on the building, no bell was ever installed. A cemetery is located on the ground of the church. It is located on the rear of the property and is still used today.

The building has suffered little in the way of alterations. The original stove is located in the basement. On December 5, 1945, the congregation changed its name to Calvary Lutheran, but did not actively use the name until 1947. Services continued in the building until September 1960, when it closed due to lack of membership. The building fell into disrepair until a group of interested people banded together to save the building. The Calvary Restoration Group repaired the building. Annual services began on July 2, 1978, and since have continued every year.

The church retains a high degree of architectural integrity and has only a few alterations. Few examples of this building type remain in South Dakota with a high degree of architectural integrity. Many churches have suffered alterations such as modern siding, new windows, and removal of the steeple. The major character-defining feature of the building is the bell tower with a mansard roof. The church building remains an excellent example of a vernacular Gothic Revival center-steeple church building and is therefore eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places under criterion C.
