Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

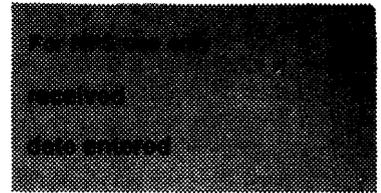

The Webber-Paepcke House, also known as Pioneer Park, sits mid-block on a large landscaped site which encompasses the whole half-block between North Third and North Fourth streets on the north side of West Bleeker Street. The site has a double row of mature cottonwood trees - one row between the street and sidewalk and one row beyond the sidewalk behind the low wrought iron fence which surrounds the property. The house, designed in the Second Empire Revival style, is rectangular in plan with a symmetrical street elevation, a Mansard roof and dormers with pediments. The first story is faced with brick, probably manufactured locally, and the second story Mansard has wood shingle facing. There are two large, one story polygonal bays at each side of the center entrance. The hipped bay roofs continue over the entrance to form a porch roof. The entry has double doors with panels in the lower portion and etched glass above. Over the doors is a transom with "Pioneer Park" painted across the glass pane. (photo 4e) The top of the doorway has a segmental arch. The windows throughout the house are one-over-one, double hung, wood sash with segmental arches and brick label molds. The eaves of the bays and between the first and second stories have sawn wooden brackets. On the east side, there is a long shallow bay with a flat roof with a center doorway flanked by three windows on each side. At the north rear, there is a two story kitchen ell which has a wood frame and clapboard addition to the west side, probably added by the Paepckes in the late 1940s. The first story of the house, carriage house and garage are painted "Paepcke Pink", a shade of pink which was used on a number of buildings in the 1940s.

The yard to the east of the house has grass and is heavily and randomly landscaped with trees and shrubs throughout. If there was an early landscape plan, it is no longer in evidence. Near the northeast corner is a small enclosed, octagonal, wooden summer house, probably built by the Paepckes. To the west of the house, the carriage house is located facing North Fourth Street at the alley. The design of the carriage house matches the main house. Extending from the east carriage house wall are several one story brick additions along the alley, including a garage added in the 1960s by owner Harold Pabst. Pabst also added the swimming pool directly south of the carriage house and the wood privacy fence along the south side of the pool. The carriage house, known as Schweitzer Cottage, was remodeled in the 1960s after the initial remodeling in the 1940s for Albert Schweitzer's visit. There is now a large second story picture window on the south. (photo #4b)

The interior of the house is notable for its fine black walnut woodwork found in the doors, the door and window frames, the baseboards, and the stairway. The black walnut woodwork is even found on the second floor, where usually a less expensive wood was more commonly used. (photo #4c, 4d, 4e) The ceilings are high with the door height reaching almost to the ceiling. The living room, east of the entry hall, has a ceiling with a wide molding and a plaster medallion with a non-original chandelier. (photo #4d) The intricately carved marble fireplace face is non-original. (photo #4f) To the west of the entry hall is a second parlor or library with a fireplace surround of painted wood with carved wood panels in an abstract design and brackets supporting the mantle piece. (photo #4g)

The Webber House is designated a local landmark.

The swimming pool, the garage and the summer house are non-contributing. The carriage house is contributing.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The 1885 Henry Webber House, which Webber named Pioneer Park, is one of the most architecturally and historically significant houses in Aspen. It is one of the few houses constructed of brick, but more importantly, it is the only Second Empire Revival style house in Aspen which retains its original exterior integrity and many of the interior details. The house is also significant for its association with the original owner, Henry Webber, pioneer shoe and boot merchant who came to Aspen in 1880 and became very wealthy through his mining investments. Webber was elected mayor of Aspen in 1888 and built one of the more prominent business blocks, the Webber Block (the Elks Building).

BACKGROUND

The original owner of this house, Henry Webber, was a prominent, but controversial figure in Aspen. Webber came to Aspen in 1880 when it was little more than a tent mining camp. His wife was one of the thirteen hearty women who spent the winter of 1880-1881 in the camp. As soon as Webber arrived, he bought a lot on Deane Street at Galena and set up business as Webber and Company in a log building stocked with boots, shoes and clothing.¹

On May 29, 1881, Mrs. Webber died of strychnine poisoning, reported as accidental, but rumored to be suicide over her husband's affair with his niece, Julia Nevitt, whom Webber married four months later.²

As Webber's boot and shoe business thrived, he invested his profits in mining. He sold the business in 1889. Meanwhile, Webber had also become city treasurer in 1883 and was elected mayor of Aspen in 1888. In 1891, Webber built a large and handsome business block, the Webber Building (the Elks Building) at 210 South Galena. It was rivaled in size and cost only by the Wheeler Opera House and the Jerome Hotel. A year later, in 1892, the building was sold to the Aspen National Bank and became known as the Bank Building. Webber died in Aspen in 1911.³

The second owners of consequence of the Webber House were Walter Paepcke, president of Container Corporation of America in Chicago, and his wife, Elizabeth. The Paepckes bought the Webber House for their summer home after they came to Aspen in 1945 and saw the great recreational possibilities for the town. Under Paepcke's guidance, Aspen was transformed from a run-down Victorian mining town into a fashionable winter and summer resort. The 19th century mine sites on Aspen Mountain became a 20th century ski area with a chair lift. The Paepckes also initiated the Summer Music Festival, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies and the International Design Conference.⁴

In 1949, the Paepckes planned the Goethe Bicentennial Convocation and Music Festival in Aspen to honor the 200th anniversary of the birth of the German poet, Gohann Wolfgang von Goethe. They were assisted by Robert Maynard Hutchins, Chancellor of the University of Chicago and the chairman of the U. S. Goethe Bicentennial Foundation. Albert Schweitzer accepted the invitation to deliver the festival's keynote address which commemorated Goethe's birth. On this trip, which was Schweitzer's only visit to the U. S., he stayed with the Paepckes in the carriage house at the Webber House. It became known as the Schweitzer Cottage.⁵

In the early 1960s, the Webber House was bought by Harold "Shorty" Pabst. In 1969, the current owners, Mary Weaver and her son Jeff, bought the house.

The tent used for the Goethe festival in 1949 was designed by noted architect, Eero Saarinen for a gathering of some 2,000 people. This tent was used until 1964, when it was replaced with one designed by Herbert Bayer, well known artist and industrial designer, who was a close friend and an associate in Paepcke's Aspen venture.
