The Merrimac Ferry crosses the Wisconsin River between the northern extremity of State Highway 113 in Columbia County and the southern extremity of State Highway 113 in Sauk County. It is approximately 2,700 feet long and is near the west end of Lake Wisconsin.

Originally, the river at this point was much narrower and resembled the lower Wisconsin downstream of Prairie du Sac, with shifting sands constantly changing its course. In 1914, however, a hydroelectric dam was built at Prairie du Sac, seven miles downstream from Merrimac, forming Lake Wisconsin. As a result, the river at the ferry is wide and relatively deep and the Wisconsin's reddish-brown, iron-laden waters lie nearly still.

A ferryboat trip across the river at the ferry now can be taken in about twelve minutes any time 24 hours a day, nine months a year. The present boat is Colsac II, a modern cable-operated, twelve-car catamaran vessel with twin steel pontoons covered with a heavy steel floor and central powerhouse. The ferryboat is powered by a gasoline engine connected, through a transmission of pulleys and shieves, to a steel cable anchored at both termini of State Highway 113. The craft pulls itself along the cable to each highway ramp where three drawbridges are lowered to permit access by motor vehicles. The ferryboat, operated by the State Highway Commission, is a popular tourist attraction.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Merrimac Ferry is the last of over 500 ferries which once crossed Wisconsin rivers and lakes. The first Merrimac ferryboat began operation in 1844 when Chester Mattson, the town of Merrimac's first settler, obtained a territorial charter to provide service across the Wisconsin River. In 1851 a road, which later became State Trunk Highway 113, was begun and made use of the ferry. The boats which originally crossed the river at Merrimac were of the overhead cable type. The Mattson ferry was abandoned in 1877 but put back into operation in 1883 by John Brownrigg. It was operated until 1914 when the construction of a hydroelectric dam at Prairie du Sac created Lake Wisconsin. At that time Arthur Brownrigg, John Brownrigg's son, built a gasoline-engine ferryboat which did not make use of a cable. He operated this until the present type of cable-operated ferryboat was put into service in 1924. In 1933 the Wisconsin State Highway Commission became responsible for the operation of the Merrimac Ferry and since that time no fare has been charged for the Merrimac crossing. \In 1963 the eight-car Colsac I, used since 1924, was retired and became a tourist site in Merrimac. It was replaced by the larger twelve-car Colsac II now in operation.
