OVERVIEW OF THE EAST SHELBYVILLE DISTRICT

poughly T. B. d Front Bradeda by The East Shelbyville District is composed of some of the earliest buildings from Shelbyville's history. On Main Street, the one and two story brick Federal buildings occupy lots from the original town plat of 1794. An adjacent neighborhood on Third Street was an early subdivision of these original lots. The buildings have been preserved as an intact neighborhood.

ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION: EAST SHELBYVILLE DISTRICT

The earliest surviving structures are the five one and two story, three bay, gable roofed buildings on East Main Street. (Photo #15, 16). They are sited on lots from the original town plat and were built in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. Built on the hall-parlor plan, their detailing includes Flemish bond brick and jack arches. Some modification of the first stories has taken place in the commercial structures. Dormers have been added to one of the one story buildings.

There are also three later Federal brick buildings in the district. The Scearce Academy Building built by Dr. Nuckols is a central passage plan, one room deep with an original ell. The Flemish bond and the jack arches are still visible in the five bay facade despite an overlay of nineteenth century Italianate detailing. (Photo #8). The three bay Krieger House exemplifies the side passage plan as does the four bay Scofield House which is also a two-family residence. The Scofield House has Italianate modifications around the doorway and hood moldings.

The Gothic Revival style of the mid-nineteenth century is exemplified by the St. James Episcopal Church on the corner of Third and Main. It was built in 1868 as portions of Third St. were being subdivided. (Photo #17). South on Third between Clay and Bradshaw, the original half acre lots were divided into five lots facing Third. The west side of the street was developed first and vestiges of the Gothic Revival style can be seen in the wall gables and the drip moldings around the windows and doors. Early Italianate houses with arcaded porches can also be found in this area. (Photos #19, 20). The east side of the street has more of an Eastlake aspect with the turned porch posts and profusion of bargeboards. (Photos # 23, 25).

Later Italianate detailing can be found on Washington St. (Photo #7). In a one story, five bay residence, the brickwork is attributed to Deiss, a local mason and brickyard owner. The brick segmental arches over the windows and door surrounds are elegant expressions of the style.

Expression of the late nineteenth century Queen Anne style can be found in the detailing of a duplex at the corner of Bradshaw and Third. The asymmetrical roofline, mixture of materials, and use of colored glass exemplify the style. (Photo #26).

The twentieth century represented the classical revival reaction to the asymmetry of the Victorian styles. One and two story American Four Squares with hipped roofs, overhanging eaves, and classical elements on the porch such as dentils can be found in the district. (Photo #5,9) At the same time, bungalos with gable roofs which overhang the porch were being built. Brackets were used to support the overhanging eaves and sometimes found a fuller expression as "craftsman" supports to the porch. (Photo #9).

EAST SHELBYVILLE DISTRICT: SIGNIFICANCE

The East Shelbyville District contains the remnants of three early neighborhoods in Shelbyville. The cluster of brick buildings on East Main Street is the oldest surviving neighborhood of Federal structures in Shelbyville. Despite some alterations to the first floor commercial space, the three bay facades with Flemish bond and jack arches are still visible. The proportions of the gable roofed structures stand out in contrast to the later buildings found in either directions on Main. These buildings provide a glimpse of the architectural fabric of the town during the first quarter of the nineteenth century. The demolition of other nineteenth century buildings in the immediate vicinity since the 1979 survey makes recognition of these buildings through the National Register especially important.

Two of the four remaining log-core structures in the City Limits of Shelbyville are found on Washington Street. They conform to the specifications set up by the early Trustees who sold the lots in the original plan and the Eastern Addition. The rarety of remaining buildings of this type in Shelbyville makes them an important part of the nomination.

Third Street had one of the early bridges across Clear Creek and also served as the Mt. Eden Pike, one of the entrances into Shelbyville. The ten houses on Third between Clay and Bradshaw demonstrate the styles popular in the mid-nineteenth century. The continuity of setbacks, materials, porches, and floor plans contribute to a sense of place.

The East Shelbyville District is composed of outstanding individual structures such as the Scearce Academy, the Scofield House, the Krieger building, and St. James Episcopal Church. The neighborhood clusters on Washington, Main, and south Third Street are irreplaceable in terms of site preservation. The present transition of this area from residential to commercial threatens all of these structures and makes

BOUNDARY. JUSTIFICATION

North of the district are vacant lots and Clear Creek which forms the boundary of the present City Limits. West of the district are more modern commercial buildings and vacant areas where buildings have been removed. The houses left in this area are gradually being converted to commercial buildings and have lost much of their architectural integrity. South of the district are the railroad tracks with an overpass at Third Street. The area bordering the railroad tracks is devoted to light industry. East of the district is the same pattern of transitional buildings found west of the district. No groupings of houses like those found on Washington, Main and Third can be found in these adjacent areas.
