DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

N

Built for Major Robert B. Reynolds, this distinguished brick home sits prominently on a hill overlooking the town of Bearden and commands a magnificent view of both the Cumberland and Smoky Mountain ranges. The house still stands on much of its original 100 acres although rapid residential and commercial development is threatening the remaining acres.

At the time of the Mexican War, Reynolds resigned his attorneygeneralship of four Tennessee counties and accepted an appointment from President Polk in the quartermaster department, with the rank of major. He left for Mexico before Knollwood had been started, but from Mexico he sent instructions as to how the house should be constructed.

The contractors for the house were Eckle and Newman. Revnold's own slaves burned the brick for the house on site and practically all other materials such as wood and marble were taken from sites close Total cost of the house was $9,100. bv.

The house was built in the colonial style without the porches it Originally the kitchen was 20 feet behind the house but has today. in later years a kitchen was added to the main house and the original brick kitchen torn down. Despite the rapid and sometimes chaotic development going on around the house, Knollwood with its sweeping front yard and well kept appearance still retains much of her integrity as an antebellum mansion.

Built from 1849-51, Knollwood is historically significant to the Knoxville area because General James Longstreet made it his headquarters just prior to the siege of Knoxville. Longstreet and his Confederate troops were unsuccessful in trying to dislodge General Ambrose Burnside's troops and soon retreated. The house was occupied by Longstreet from November 18 until December 5, 1863.

Because of his alliance with the Confederacy, Major Reynold's mansion was confiscated from him after the War. However, he regained possession after a favorable decision by the United States Supreme Court.

In 1888 Knollwood was sold to E. H. Edington who built a wood frame kitchen attached to the house. He also added a porte cochere. In 1904 Edington sold the house to Bruce Keener who tore down the frame kitchen and replaced it with the present 2-story kitchenbedroom addition. A basement was put under the new kitchen which housed the steam heating plant.

11 Las

1919 saw the house pass from Keener to Charles A. Griffith, a wealthy coal operator. It was Griffith who installed all the present day electrical wiring. He also added the large 2-story columned porch which still graces the front of Knollwood.

The present owners, the Harvey Tucker family, purchased the house from Griffith in the early 1950's. The Tuckers have successfully maintained the basic stately integrity of Knollwood having kept the grounds in immaculate condition and furnishing the interior with furniture consistent with the house's age.

Knollwood should seriously be considered for the National Register not only for its historic past but also because it still gives an indication of what life was like in the antebellum South, and is an excellent example of antebellum architecture.

This two-story red brick residence, originally built in a rectangular form, reflects the Georgian Revival mode. The main source of inspiration appears in late Georgian colonial style.

The hip roof, rectangular shape and symmetrical arrangement are enforced by the formal treatment of the main facade, collosal order pedimented portico entrance, and paired chimneys enclosed in the end walls.

The only variation in the rectangular plan is the two-story bay located on the south elevation, which is a kitchen and bedroom wing that was added in 1904. This kitchen replaced a frame kitchen that had been attached to the house in 1888. At the time of the 1904 addition, a basement housing the steam heating plant was put under the new kitchen.

One-story portico wings with balustraded deck roof were attached to the north and south elevation in 1919, as was the two-story columned front porch with pediment. During this time the present electrical system was installed.

Although some changes have been made to the original Knollwood, it remains a significant architectural example of mid-nineteenth century building erected by prosperous citizens of Tennessee. It is located in an area that was once farm land, but has been extensively developed as a residential area. It occupies a place of prominence in the area, and its preservation is vital to the area.

Although the present owner once owned more land, he presently owns only 20 acres. He prefers that less than 10 acres be nominated, rather than the entire tract that he owns. For this reason, this nomination covers nine acres surrounding the house.
