7. Description

The John E. Lee house is a 2-story brick residence with a stone foundation built in a modified "L" shape. The central mass of the home has a hipped roof. Gabled bays project in the south and the east. The front gable is sided with wood shingles and contains a half round window on the third story. Below this gable, on the second story, are three double hung sash windows which are defined by four cast iron Corinthian columns. The columns support a flat entablature. Also on the front of the structure is a three-sided bay with balcony above. The front porch wraps around to the east side of the house and is supported by four Doric columns. The double front door is extant. All of the windows of the house are set off by yellow brick or stone lintels, and stone sills. The east elevation has three double hung sash windows and a porch in the rear. Most of the building's original exterior character remains and the owner wishes to preserve the existing integrity and renovate as much as possible.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The John E. Lee house was constructed in 1903 and is a significant example of Victorian eclectic, patternbook influenced house forms. Its style and materials relate it to other buildings of this type in Utah, though its location in Hyde Park and its integrity place it in a position apart from similar structures in larger, more densely populated areas. It is an imposing landmark in Hyde Park, a representative example of its type in rural areas.

The house was built for Jonn E. Lee and his wife, Hattie Reeder Lee. The builder was Jesse Hancey, and the architect was Christian C. Lee, John E. Lee's father. John E. Lee was born in Hyde Park, Utah, October 1, 1867 to Christian C. and Chomena Peterson Lee. His parents were among the 23 people who first settled Hyde Park in the Spring of 1860. His father was one of the town's leading businessmen. He operated the town's general store and pioneered in the dairy industry of Cache Valley, which became an important part of the area's economy during the period from about 1880 to 1910. John E. Lee lived in Hyde Park all his life. He became a farmer and stockraiser, and was associated with his father in C. C. Lee and Sons, general store and creamery. He was also active in local Mormon church affairs and served in the bishopric of the Hyde Park L.D.S. Ward for 16 years.

Jesse Hancey, the builder, was a carpenter and cabinetmaker. He built a number of houses in Hyde Park, supervised the construction of the first church in Hyde Park, known as "The Old Rock Meeting House," and operated the first saw mill.

Lee occupied the house until his death in 1957.
