DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Niagara Reservation consists of a narrow strip of land along the eastern shore of the Niagara River, centered at the site of the American Falls, and extending for short distances both above and below the falls, as well as the cluster of islands situated in and between the falls. The largest island, Goat Island is connected to the eastern shore by two bridges, and is connected by bridge to the Three Sisters Islands off its southern shore as well. The other, smaller islands include Robinson Island, Bird Island, Brother Island and Green Island.

Upon the signing of the bill which created the reservation, the commissioners assigned to select the lands and manage the reservation, followed the guidelines which had been suggested in a report made in 1879 by Frederick Law Olmsted, the landscape architect, and James T. Gardiner, the head of the State-appointed survey. This report directed that the islands above the falls, and a strip of land alongside the falls be included, and that only such arrangements as were necessary to preserve the natural scene should be made. Little or no construction, except that to facilitate visitors' appreciation of the site, was to be made. In 1887, Olmsted and his associate Calvert Vaux implemented this plan. The eastern shore and the islands were cleared and the eastern boundary of the shore land was planted so as to screen out the city of Niagara Falls to the east.

In 1900, the administration building and visitors' comfort facilities were built both on the shore and on Goat Island. The administration building, located on the shore to the east of Prospect Point, is still in use. Many of the comfort facilities have been replaced or modernized.

Sightseeing roads have been laid out around the perimeter of Goat Island, and a new restaurant has recently been constructed on its western shore.

The greatest intrusion in the reservation since its creation is the Robert Moses Parkway, completed in 1960, which is a four lane, divided highway which runs perallel to the eastern shore, through the middle of the reservation.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Today's visitor can enjoy the beauty and might of Niagara Falls due to the far-sighted action of the state of New York which in 1885 established the Niagara Reservation. In creating the reservation and subsequently eliminating the numerous eyesores that had sprung up along the shore line near the Falls. New York became the first state to use its power of eminent domain to acquire land for esthetic purposes. This precedent has been followed in principle by state after state since 1885.

Now surrounded by the bustling town of Niagara Falls, the initial 418 acre Reservation has increased to 435 acres. Aside from the construction of the Robert Moses Parkway along the eastern boundary of the Reservation, and the modernization of visitors' facilities, the park presents the same appearance as it has for almost 100 years.

History

As early as 1834 it was suggested that the land near Niagara Falls be cleared of the factories, hotels, and signs in order that the Falls might be viewed in a natural setting. But for many years this idea received no support. In 1870's many prominent citizees joined those who complained about conditions around the Falls; these included Frederick Law Olmsted, the landscape architect; Henry James, the famous novelist; Charles Eliot Norton, the influential editor of the Nation and Frederic Edwin Church, the painter of the monumental Niagara Falls.

By the end of the decade, the movement began to take effect. New York's governor suggested action concerning the falls in his annual message to the legislature in 1879; and a survey of the situation around the Falls was authorized. The report recommended that the state purchase the lands around the Falls so that visitors could view the scene from a proper setting. A memorial signed by the Vice President of the United States, the Governor General of Canada and other important personages supported the report, but a new state administration proved unsympathetic.

Niagara Reservation

CONTINUATION SHEET	ITEM NUMBER	8	PAGE 2

Stymied, but not defeated, the adherents of the Niagara Falls movement redoubled their attempts in behalf of their cause. A flood of articles and speeches poured forth, all of them being intended to galvanize public support. In 1883, the proponents of a park at the cataract formed a Niagara Falls Association, which quickly attracted members and created additional pressure upon the state government. Indeed, a bill sponsored by the Association was presented to the legislature in the same year, and by the end of April it had been passed and signed by Governor Grover Cleveland. The act created a commission to choose the lands that should be preserved near the falls; in a relatively short time the commission had selected a narrow strip of land along the northeastern shore. Final success for the defenders of the falls came in 1885, when in April a bond issue of $1,000,000 was authorized to pay for the land. On July 15, the state dedicated the Niagara Reservation.

The formation of the Niagara Reservation stands as a tremendous victory in the struggle to save grand aspects of our natural scenery. Once the park had been created, the state removed about 150 buildings and eradicated all raceways and flumes from the area, certainly tangible proof of the triumph of public interest over private property. No one can doubt the value of New York's landmark action concerning Niagara Falls, or the worth of subsequent similar moves by other states.
