DESCRIBE THE PE	RESENT AND ORI	GINAL (if kn	own) PHYSICA	LAPPEARANCE

The simple federal form of this large two-story brick house has remained relatively unchanged since its construction in 1850. The floor plan has the central hall with two rooms on either side and an ell at the right rear.

The house has a recessed front entrance with a second floor balcony onto which opens double doors from an upstairs hall. A large window on each side of the front entrance-both up and down stairshas a stone lintel, wood shutters, and window panes that are today six over six, although earlier the panes were smaller. Each elevation of the building has a cornice with dentil work that remains in good condition. The house has two chimneys rising above a hipped roof--covered today with tin.

An ancient boxwood border outlines the original stone sidewalk, now almost entirely buried. A late nineteenth century cistern building is standing at the left rear of the house.

The significance of the Wilson-Young house lies in its architectural style. This simple brick structure illustrates the federal style as it was adapted to this part of the country. Although unpretentious, the dignity of this house has remained relatively unchanged through the years.

According to verbal tradition, this house was built by a slave who was a skillful brickmaker and mason. Mrs. Jessie Eagin, one of the present occupants, recalls having heard throughout the years that Andrew Madison Wilson, builder of the house, leased from a neighbor the skilled slave for one year at a cost of $1,500.00. Although most difficult to document, a significant amount of building in Tennessee was done by black craftsmen and this structure appears to be one such example.

Family reminiscences written in the 1930's state that the bricks were made on the farm in kilns 8' high and 10' in diameter. Also by tradition the facel pricks were salt glazed by rubbing them with salt pork and be prescripting.
