Continuation SheetSection number 7 Page 1Description

During the Railroad Era (1870-1914) in White County a variety of vernacular houses were constructed. They were also built out of a variety of materials. Surviving examples from this period, however, are somewhat limited. The Gray-Kincaid House is a good example of how a building was altered to adapt to the then current needs of a family. It was originally a dog trot with a rear ell but was turned into a single pile with a central hall c. 1910 and was used as a tenant house. The rear ell was destroyed by a storm in the 1940's. The house is currently one and one-half-stories tall, frame, and has a corrugated metal gable roof. Walls are clad with board and batten and the entire structure rests on stone piers. The building is currently unoccupied and in fair condition.

Located approximately one-half mile southeast of the intersection of County Roads 46 and 759, this building is less than two and one-half miles northeast of the crossroad community of Crosby. The Gray-Kincaid House faces north and this elevation is fenestrated with symmetrically placed four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows. They flank the now enclosed trot. A single door enters this part of the building and is located east of center. While the upper portions of both gable ends are clad with weatherboard only the eastern one is terminated by an exterior cut stone chimney. A window similar to ones found on the main facade is located immediately south of the chimney. The west elevation of the original building has an opening in a similar location but it is now covered with corrugated metal.

A shed roof addition stretches the full length of the south elevation of the structure. A single door enters the east elevation of the addition while a single four-over-four double-hung wood sash window relieves the west elevation. Openings along the south elevation of the structure consist of asymmetrically placed doors and windows. There are two types of windows found on this side: four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows and two-pane fixed frame windows.

Significance

The Gray-Kincaid House is very similar to the Gray House that lies just three-quarters of a mile to the southeast. Both houses were originally constructed as dog trots with rear ells, have four-over-four double-hung wood sash windows, and exterior end cut stone chimneys. Both are located in the vicinity of what was once known as the Crosby community and are some of the last extant examples that depict a time when Crosby was once a bustling railroad town. The Missouri and North Arkansas Railroad transported tourists to Crosby where they were then taken by buggies to Armstrong Springs.

This house is significant because it reflects the evolution of housing in White County. Originally built as a dog trot it was later enclosed when it became a tenant farmers house early in the twentieth century. Very few tenant farmer houses are left in the county and that is why the Gray-Kincaid House is being nominated under Criterion C with local significance.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.
