Salmon la Sac Guard Station is a two and one-half story building constructed in the summer of 1912 partly of logs and partly of sawed lumber. It is a rectangular structure 22 feet by 32 feet with a high surrounding porch 80 inches wide all of which is covered by a simple gable roof. The roof overhang is supported by vertical log posts. The roof is corrugated iron which was a replacement sometime prior to 1932 for the original roof made of cedar shakes and extending almost to the ground at the back of the building.

The lower two stories are constructed of horizontal logs with wood and mortar chinking. The logs are generally thirteen inches in diameter hewn on the inside to form a wall ten to twelve inches thick. The gable ends of the upper one-half story are frame construction finished with vertical planking.

The first or ground story is slightly submerged and is constructed of heavier logs which have been squared and fitted tightly together. This level serves as the basement. By 1934 the sill logs had decayed and the building had settled so that all floors sloped away from the central fireplace. In that year the building was placed on a continuous concrete foundation in an attempt to arrest the decay but the building settlement was not completely corrected. Concrete piers were also placed under the roof support posts at that time and a concrete basement floor was installed.

The second level is the main living area. Doors in front and back are located on this level as is the porch with stairs to the ground level both front and back. This level contains the living room with a brick fireplace, kitchen, bedroom, bathroom and a small room used as an office. Modern plumbing has been added in both the kitchen and bath.

The upper one-half story is sleeping quarters reached by a stairway from the living room.

The building has no electrical wiring.

Decay is evident in the basement door jamb and in the sill logs. Building settlement has caused the floors to slope approximately two inches from the center to the outside edges. Chinking, both wood and mortar is missing in several areas and loose in others. In 1964 the building was no longer considered suitable for occupancy and has been declared surplus to Forest Service needs. Since 1964 the building has continued to deteriorate to the condition described above.
