Description

The Childer's Farmstead consists of three associated buildings: the main house, a Delco house, and a large barn. However, it is the design of the residence for which this property is being nominated.

The Childer's Farmstead house is a single story, wood frame vernacular residence. A hipped roof covers the double pile/central hall house and an original shed roof porch shelters the northern or front entrance. A single brick chimney is placed near the southwest corner of the house and outside what was formerly the rear wall of the house; it has since been extended by a full-length shed roof porch which is enclosed at this corner. The house is covered with a composition shingle roof, sheathed in novelty siding, and supported by brick piers.

The northern or front elevation is dominated by the three-quarter length, shed roof porch, the pitch of which is continuous with that of the hipped roof behind. The wall beneath is symmetrically arranged, with a central entrance flanked by two pair of three-over-one Craftsman windows. The entrance features a single-leaf door flanked by unusual half-sidelights. The vertical panes are set into a frame -- the lower half of which features three square recessed panels with raised centers -- which is hinged so that the entire frame swings inward, including the panelled section. The door and sidelights are recessed by simply panelled dividers which frame the entire entry. The door is lighted with four vertical panes in its upper half and three horizontal wood panels below. The porch ceiling is finished in narrow flush planks and supported on simple solid wood posts. The southern elevation is similar in its use of a shed roof porch, though on this elevation it is full-length with an enclosed room at the western end. It appears as if the open section was enclosed also at one point, though any wall which may have existed is now gone. The currently enclosed section is fenestrated with a single central three-over-one window. The wall beneath the porch features a central window and a doorway to the east.

The eastern and western elevations are very similar, with each featuring a pair of three-over-one wood sash windows to the north and another pair of smaller fixed windows to the south. The only exception is that the western elevation also features a three-over-one wood sash window in the enclosed room to the south.

The interior has been modified only in the addition of a bath at the end of the central hall, a change almost certainly made when the rear (southern) shed roof addition was built.

Also included in the nomination are a small, gable roof Delco house, which provided electricity to the house before commercial electricity became available, and a large, gable roof barn.

Significance

The Childer's Farmstead house is a remarkable example of a Greek Revival farmhouse design -- complete with appropriate floor plan, entrance, and window placement -- surviving into the first quarter of the twentieth century. Even more unusual is the adornment of this retarditaire design with relatively new, Craftsman details. It is possible that a member or members of the Childer family had been raised in a house like this, though so little is known about this family that this is impossible to document. Nevertheless, the Childer's Farmstead stands as a mute testimonial to the endurance of this tradition well into the twentieth century.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.

In Section 3, the barn should be counted as a building, rather than a structure, since it was intended to provide shelter.

Beginning at a point on the southern edge of County Road 443 located due south of its perpendicular intersection with the eastern edge of County Road 448 to the north, proceed easterly along the southern edge of County Road 443 for a distance of approximately 500 feet to its intersection with a perpendicular line running parallel to the eastern elevation of the main residence; thence proceed southerly along said line for a distance of approximately 600 feet to its intersection with a perpendicular line running parallel with the southern elevation of the associated barn; thence proceed westerly along said line for a distance of approximately 500 feet to its intersection with a perpendicular line running parallel to the barn's western elevation; thence proceed northerly along said line for a distance of approximately 600 feet to the point of beginning.

Boundary Justification:

The original lot has been subdivided during the non-historic period, resulting in an indefinite current lot boundary; therefore, this boundary includes all the property historically associated with this resource that retains its integrity.
