Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Situated on the south side of Eldridge Avenue and fronting Newton Creek, the Joseph Thackara House is a five-bay, two and one-half story mid-eighteenth century brick dwelling with an early one and one-half story lean-to frame wing on the east gable end and an unkeyed modern brick two car garage addition on the west gable end. The main brick section is well preserved.

Executed in Flemish bond, the symmetrical front or south, facade features: central raised three-over-two entrance door with flat-arched brick head above pegged wood lintel; six-over-six sash windows with integral projecting wood sills and cyma reversa brick molds; segmentally arched-head basement window openings (one altered) punctuating a molded brick watertable above a coursed fieldstone foundation: brick belt course and flush wood joist ends at previous full-front first-story pent roof; and, simple wood box cornice with unmolded crown and bed.

The Eldridge Avenue facade, originally the rear elevation, is laid in a variation of English bond with a header course every fourth course. Six-over-six sash windows, evidence of an original pent roof, wood box cornice, and segmentally arched-head basement window openings are features shared with the front facade. It should be noted that there is no water table, the first floor east window opening holds an eight-over-eight sash window, and the raised panel door dates to the Victorian period. The box cornice, which features a cyma recta crown and a quarter round cove bed, is more elaborate than that of the south elevation suggesting that the vernacular south cornice "moldings" are not original.

That the cornice moldings would have originally matched is certain, as a brick ledger course and projecting (in the addition on east gable end) or flush (exposed west gable end) joist ends indicate an original pent roof below the third floor on both gable ends. A contemporary extant detail where the eaves are connected with a pent roof can be observed at the Peter Wentz House in Skippack, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania (1758). At Thackara House, the date, 1754, and the initials, T.J.M, set with glazed headers in the west gable establish the date of construction and the identity of the builders, Joseph and Mary Thackara. The roof is punctuated by two single-flue chimneys at the east, and a single chimney with two flues on the south face at the west. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles; however, an early wood shingle roof installed with hand-cut nails is extant underneath.

Minor alterations have not compromised the integrity of the original room interiors. Fine panelled fireplace walls with floor-to-ceiling closets flanking generous center fireplaces are at both ends of the living room, which was originally divided by a beaded board partition. Three fireplace walls feature beautifully articulated wood cornices consisting of cyma recta, fillet, cyma reversa, fascia, soffit, quarter-round, and cove moldings. Similar fireplace walls exist at Hope Lodge in Whitemarsh, Pennsylvania (1743-8).

The present dining room originally featured a whitewashed exposed beam ceiling (extant above existing plastered ceiling) and is thought to have served as the kitchen prior to the addition of the frame lean-to wing. This conclusion is reinforced by the room's eight-over-eight sash window (kitchens often had a larger window), and the size of the brick vault for this fireplace in the cellar. The dining room mantle is early, but not original, and dates to the fireplace alterations at the time of the addition. A fourth fireplace, in the southwest bedroom chamber, is set in a panelled wall with molded cornice and flanking closets. The south closet features peg boards with extant vernacular whittled pegs.

All original room partitions, other than masonry walls, are of vertical random width, hand-planed, tongued-and-grooved boards, some of which are more than sixteen inches wide. All ceilings are plaster on lath; all floors are of random width boards fastened with hand forged nails. (Some floors have been covered with hardboard and linoleum tile.) Baseboards are beaded, windows feature molded projecting heads above plastered jambs, and much of the original wrought iron hardware, such as H-L hinges and thumb latches, has survived.

A cellar with brick floor extends under the main structure which is built on an uncoursed fieldstone foundation. A central load bearing masonry wall runs east-west; brick vaults support the chimneys. Both cellar and garrett framing is of mortised, tenoned, and pegged hand-squared timbers. The garrett is unfinished but floored, with over ten feet of head room at the ridge and a flat arched window opening in each gable end. Of note in the west gable end is the casement window sash which, with its wider central horizontal muntin, was detailed to look like a double-hung window.

Specific dates 1754 Builder/Architect Joseph and Mary Thackara, builders

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Joseph Thackara House is the only mid-eighteenth century brick dwelling in West Collingswood and is associated directly with the third generation of one of the six earliest families in the area. The house is the best preserved and one of the few extant Eighteenth Century farmhouses on Newton Creek, one of the earliest areas of settlement in what is now Camden County. A map drawn by First Settler Thomas Sharp in 1700 shows a structure on this site at that time.

Mark Newbie, William Bates, George Goldsmith, Thomas Thackara, Robert Zane and Thomas Sharp, all Irish Quakers, settled on a 1750 acre community tract between Newton Creek and Coopers Creek in March 1682. This settlement, known as Newton Colony, was the first permanent English settlement in Old Gloucester County. The community tract was subdivided in 1683 and Thomas Thackara took as his share 250 acres facing Newton Creek and adjoining the tract of Mark Newbie. A small plot which Thackara gave that same year as a burial ground for his friend Newbie was extended in 1684 by additional land which Thackara conveyed to the Newton Meeting to provide land for the Old Newton Burial Grounds and a site for the first Meeting House. Thomas gave 60 acres to his son-in-law, John Whitall, in 1696 and willed the remainder to his son, Benjamin, in 1702. Benjamin gave 50 acres to his brother-in-law, John Eastlack, in 1706 and died leaving the remainder of his estate to his son, Joseph, in 1727.

Joseph Thackara, grandson of First Settler Thomas Thackara, and the builder of Joseph Thackara House, married Hanna Albertson, widow of John Albertson and granddaughter of Mark Newbie, in 1731. Thus, in the third generation, these two first families were joined. Joseph Thackara and his second wife, Mary Young, (married 1752) are known as the builders of the present brick house and it is their initials with the date, 1754, which are set in glazed brick in the west gable of the house.

The present house is near the site of the first cabin of Thomas Thackara as shown on Thomas Sharp's map in 1700 (see attached). The inventory of Thomas Thackara's estate at his death in 1702 describes the cabin's rooms as kitchen, the little room and the new room. The inventory of Benjamin Thackara's estate at his death in 1727 shows the cabin expanded to included a kitchen, a chamber (the little room), an inner room (the previous new room), a new room and a cellar. The inventory of Benjamin Thackara's estate also includes 47,500 bricks, which represents almost exactly the number of bricks used in the building of Thackara House, suggesting that the house, completed by Joseph in 1754, was a project begun by his father before his death.

Thomas Thackara was an Assemblyman from the Third, or Irish, Tenth at the first session of the General Free Assembly of the Province of West Jersey held in Burlington November 21-27, 1681. He was later chosen as a first Justice from the Third Tenth and became a first Justice of Old Gloucester County when it was incorporated. He also served as a Land Commissioner. His son, Benjamin Thackara, was a Freeholder for Old Gloucester County.

Joseph Thackara held several positions of great responsibility in his community. The Minute Book of Newton Township, 1723-1821, shows that he was elected Overseer of the Poor, 1744-45; Constable, 1746-47; Surveyor of Highways, 1749-53; and, Surveyor of Roads, 1756. Most of the tax monies collected were dispensed by the Overseer of the Poor and by the Surveyor of Roads and Highways. This would suggest that Joseph Thackara was a man of integrity and trust, a characteristic further upheld by the number of times his name appears as appraiser, bondsman, executor, and witness to the wills of his neighbors. Joseph died December 4, 1761 and willed to his son, Stephen, "the plantation where I live." Stephan's will at his death August 4, 1767, left to his son, James, "the improved part of the land where I live."

In 1790, James Thackara sold to James Sloan a small strip of land adjoining the Old Newton Burial Grounds for the Newton Union Burial Grounds to provide a burial place for non-Quakers and 22 Revolutionary War soldiers who had been disowned by the Meeting for bearing arms. His brother, Joseph Sloan, purchased the balance of the Thackara Plantation from James Thackara in 1799 thereby ending 118 years of ownership by the Thackara Family.

Through successive owners, the plantation was prosperously farmed through the nineteenth century as the surrounding area developed and the railroad, located two hundred yards west of Thackara House, provided access between Philadelphia and Atlantic City. In 1887 the plantation was purchased by Edward C. Knight who, through his agent Richard T. Collings, had already acquired most of the Robert Zane survey to the east. The land was then sold in tracts to the Collingswood Land Company who subdivided it into city blocks and lots.

Architecturally, the Thackara House is significant as a straight-forward example of a mid-eighteenth century brick colonial Quaker farmhouse executed with the detailing and construction methodology distinctive of its period. Remarkably intact in comparison to other private homes of its age, the house has been "modernized" with great sensitivity and contextual response. Additions were planned to be reversible without damage to the historic fabric; required replacement elements (such as window sash) have been in-kind, with original fabric salvaged and stored on site. Although the pent roofs have been removed, the brick ledger course and roof joist ends remain, illustrative of the structural support technique. Unlike the Stokes-Lee House, Collingswood's other surviving eighteenth-century home on Newton Creek, the Thackara House has not been stylistically remodelled over the years. Variable-width beaded board partitions and board-and-batten doors, raised panel doorways with over panels, fine panelled fireplace walls with integral closets and double-ogee crown cornice moldings, exposed hewn construction and joinery details in both garrett and cellar, original stairways, and definitive dating are all factors which contribute to the building's architectural significance and usefulness as a rare surviving example of its period in history.
