Summary

The Coronado Neighborhood Historic District is located in Phoenix which lies in the Salt River Valley of central Arizona. It is located northeast of the central business district, and is bounded by Seventh Street on the west, Virginia Avenue on the north, Fourteenth Street on the east and McDowell Road on the south. Surrounded by intense commercial development, the Coronado Neighborhood is one of Phoenix's few remaining historic residential areas, and possesses a high degree of architectural integrity from its development period. The historic district encompasses an area of forty-nine city blocks containing 1,039 structures, including 702 contributing resources, and 337 non-contributors. The area is residential in character but does have several commercial, institutional, and religious buildings, mostly located on the periphery. Surburban residency in the neighborhood dates from 1907 but the majority of the buildings were developed between 1920-1935.

Architectural Context

Bungalows dominate the architectural character of the district, although the neighborhood also contains examples of Ranch style, Spanish Colonial Revival, English Cottage, International, and Neoclassical Revival, and various Period Revival styles plus a few examples of Art Moderne. Some buildings have undergone various alterations including additions and porch infills; however, a large number are completely intact, and the contributors have retained integrity of design and construction. As a diverse middle class neighborhood, the residences are unpretentious and solid and reflect an all-American interest in current styles popular elsewhere in the country.

Located here, too, are examples of less substantial Eclectic (or Vernacular) and utilitarian buildings, as well as a few remaining farmhouses scattered throughout the district.

The historic district is unified with a rectilinear street plan, fifty-foot lots with consistent set-backs, and mature landscaping. Viewed together, the neighborhood is a homogeneous whole with diverse architectural styles. It is a green oasis that has managed to remain intact as a neighborhood, although it has constantly been threatened by the encroachment of progress and intense development.

DESCRIPTION OF ARCHITECTURAL STYLES

Spanish Colonial Revival

This architectural style is defined by ornate, low-relief carvings, arches, columns, window surrounds, cornices, and parapets. Red-tiled hipped roofs and arched porches are also typical, as are flat roofs with parapets, tile canales, buttressed walls surfaced in stucco, windows that are either straight or arched, and ornamental iron grilles.

In the Coronado Neighborhood, these dwellings are of very modest proportions. Spanish Colonial Revival Style has remained popular in Arizona where it is seen as being responsive to, and compatible with, the desert environment. Good examples of this style may be found on Tenth between Virginia and Sheridan Streets, as well as the 2300 block of Evergreen and the 2500 block of North Eighth Street. Total number of structures of this style: 122.

Bungalow

The typical bungalow is a one-story house with broad gently sloping gables and a similar broad-gabled porch centered on the front facade. Typically, rafters, ridge beams, and purlins extend beyond the wall and roof. Chimneys are of rubble, cobblestone, or rough-faced brick. Porch piers are battered and the exterior is finished in stucco or brick. Windows are either sash or casements with either multi-lights or single panes of glass.

Bungalows are the prevalent style in this neighborhood. They are modest one, two, and three-bedroom dwellings, usually one-story, with multiple sloping roofs and wide porches. The rooms are small, but contain built-ins and modern conveniences that must have aroused the envy of women dwelling in the older style adobes and semi-permanent tent houses from a previous era.

In the Coronado Neighborhood, the bungalows express individuality in the use of materials such as river-washed stone for pillars and porches, variegated brick, half-timbering at some pediments, a variety of wood-trimmed porch treatments, and a plethora of window pane arrangements. Garages were built to the rear of the lot, usually employing construction details from the main house. In some bungalows, porte-cocheres were extended over the concrete driveways, providing some protection for owners' automobiles. The garages and porte-cocheres are indications that cars were becoming an increasingly important form of transportation. Good examples of bungalows can be seen in the 2500 block on Edgemere, as well as on Coronado and Granada Streets. One exceptional example, constructed completely of rubble is located at 2537 North Eighth Street, site number 117-30-36. Total number of structures of this style: 621.

Art Moderne

Soft or rounded corners, flat roofs, smooth wall finishes without surface ornamentation, and horizontal bands of windows create the distinctive streamlined, or wind tunnel appearance, which characterizes the Art Moderne style. The streamlined effect is emphasized by the use of glass block and curved window glass which wraps around corners. Ornamentation consists of mirrored panels, concrete panels, and an occasional metal panel with low-relief decoration around doorways and windows. Aluminum and stainless steel are often used for door and window trim, railings, and balusters.

English Cottage/Tudor Revival

These structures are characterized by the use of steep gable roofs with wood shingles, arched casement windows with many lights, an exterior veneer of stone or stucco, and half-timbered pediments. The main entrance is enclosed and is centered on the front facade. It is approached by a small stoop. Good examples may be found on the west side of Twelfth Street.

Eclectic/Vernacular

These structures incorporate elements of a number of styles, making style typing impossible. Eclectic buildings were often the end result of owners' or contractors' recall of various styles, or were vernacular in that they had no distinctive style of their own.

Ranch

Ranch style dwellings utilize a simple, functional floor plan with few facade variations. The dwellings are of the same modest proportions that characterized the bungalow and are laid out on slab concrete pads, in a linear fashion facing the street, with attached garages and patios. Few exterior details adorn the Ranch style with its lower roof lines and ceilings. Good examples of this style can be found on East Granada between North Thirteenth and North Fifteenth Streets. These buildings, due to their age, are non-contributors.

Other Notable Examples

2-story apartment building - 902 East Palm Lane, Site Number 117-31-191. A unique application of varigated brick.

Pueblo Revival Residence - 2512 N. Twelfth Street, Site Number 117-27-103. Vernacular example of the Pueblo Revival style exemplified by the use of a stucco finish, a curved parapet, and vigas.

New Deal Grocery - Site Number 117-27-150. A one-story L-shaped commercial building employing arched openings and corbeling for ornamentation.

Criteria for including properties as Contributors to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District

Contributing resources are defined as those which were constructed during the neighborhood's period of significance and relate to the adjacent structures in terms of scale, massing, materials, color, craftsmanship, style, and setback. Buildings not sharing these common characteristics, or those that have been significantly altered, thereby either totally removing or obscuring the essential character of the building, were determined to be non-contributors. Examples of such alterations include the application of inappropriate veneers, major alterations of fenestration, and the enclosing of porches. Of the later residences constructed in the neighborhood, the ranch style was the most common.

Contributors, non-contributors and vacant sites are listed by street address.

Boundary Justification

Virginia Avenue provides a very strong northern boundary to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District. It is a transitional street linking commercial and residential areas. To the west, Seventh Street provides a distinct ending, however, due to the interjection of many new commercial structures and many insensitive alterations, the western boundary has been moved inward to the alley east of Seventh Street.

The southern limit of the district is visually associated with McDowell Road. Again, as in the case of the western boundary, it has had many alterations made to its historic buildings, and many new commercial structures have been constructed on infill lots. Therefore, this boundary is drawn at the interface of the historic neighborhood and the newer commercial areas.

The eastern boundary has been drawn by the existence of blocks of predominantly historic homes possessing a high degree of integrity. This boundary becomes essentially the west side of Thirteenth Street with an extension to Fourteen Street between Sheridan and Oak.

Precise boundaries are indicated on the accompanying district map and encompass the entirety of each property within, as defined by the individual tax parcel numbers provided on the accompanying inventory forms. Boundaries are drawn along lot lines or along the inside curblines of perimeter streets.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Summary Statement

The Coronado Neighborhood Historic District is a diverse middle class residential neighborhood dating from 1907 to 1935 and possessing a high degree of integrity. It is significant architecturally as a collection of diverse styles which share a common period of construction, craftsmanship, scale, materials, setback, and feeling. The architecture clearly conveys the 1920s development of the neighborhood.

Coronado is significant as an example of Phoenix's early subdivision growth utilizing wide streets in a grid pattern. The typical blocks are fairly small and are bisected by narrow alleyways. The lots are well-landscaped although no specific pattern is used.

In comparison with the other residential neighborhoods in Phoenix which are already listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the Encanto-Palmcroft Historic district, and the four districts within the Roosevelt Neighborhood Multiple Resource Area (Chelsea Place, Kenilworth, Portland Street and Roosevelt), the Coronado Neighborhood is the largest, although it is the least monumental in terms of building scale and historically housed a more typically middle class population. From 1910-1920, the Roosevelt neighborhoods grew as an elite white-collar streetcar suburb, and many of the wealthier residents then moved into the exclusive Encanto-Palmcroft subdivisions in the late 1920s. By contrast, Coronado which grew throughout this time period, was a modest neighborhood which evolved essentially during that same period, 1907-1935. Coronado can be further described as a neighborhood which was promoted as a streetcar suburb and later became dependent on the automobile, since it was located a significant distance from the main commercial hub of Phoenix. This characteristic is evidenced by the predominance of porte-cocheres and detached garages in the neighborhood.

Finally, the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District is significant as an example of early suburbanization and development of Phoenix in the first half of the twentieth century. By 1935, Phoenix was Arizona's largest city, and from an agrarian beginning, Coronado, within a fifteen-year period (1920-1935), had become one of its largest residential sections. This was through the combined efforts of both speculative developers and individual homeowners.

Of the non-residential structures, two sites of important historic association with the district's growth and development are located here, Emerson School and Coronado Park. Those facilities provided open space and recreational facilities, further incentives for young expanding families to purchase homes there.

History

From its founding in 1870 as an agricultural community, Phoenix enjoyed through its first three decades, a slow but steady growth due to its location in the broad Salt River Valley of central Arizona and the natural advantages there of an abundant water supply, rich arable land (readily available), and a temperate climate. Phoenix was also blessed with progressive leaders who wanted to see the town grow, so fostered its development by vigorous "boosterism": bringing in necessary outside capital, promoting ordinances and regulations that would give the town an attractive visual image, extolling far and wide with unabashed publicity the virtues of Phoenix as a "sun-kissed oasis," and giving enterprising entrepreneurs freedom to operate. As a result, by 1900, although still not officially the largest city in Arizona Territory, Phoenix was the dominant one, the capital and the hub of agriculture, commerce, administration, and transportation. It was well on its way to becoming the major urban center of the Southwest, and its ranks of permanent residents swelled each year as more and more winter visitors, health seekers, and capitalists became aware of the Valley's "atmosphere of ozone, hopefulness, and optimism."

Residential additions to Phoenix, beginning with the 1880 Neahr Addition, fanned out from the original townsite until disastrous flooding of the Salt River in the 1890s caused the more affluent citizens to leave the southern sections and begin moving to new residential districts on higher ground: north along Central Avenue, west along Washington Street, and northwest adjacent to diagonal Grand Avenue. This northward pattern continued, marking a permanent change in the direction of the city's development. In the first years of the twentieth century, several suburbs grew up along, and adjacent to, Central Avenue. Among them, some two miles northeast of downtown Phoenix, was the tract of land that came to be known in the 1970s as Coronado Neighborhood, comprising Section 33 and the west half of Section 34, Township 2 North, Range 3 East, Maricopa County.

The future Coronado Neighborhood in the first decade of the twentieth century, was a combination of virgin desert and cultivated farm lands--alfalfa and cotton fields dotted with scattered farmhouses, orchards, dairy barns, and pastures. The tract lay south and west of the northwesterly-trending loop of the Maricopa Canal and was bisected from east to west along present-day Oak Street by the South Branch of the Maricopa, also called the Little Maricopa. The Maricopa Canal, (probably dating from the nineteenth century) was an irrigation system which had been developed to furnish water to lands north of the Salt River, and followed (as did most major canals in the Valley) ancient irrigation ditches dug by the Hohokam, a prehistoric Indian culture. A large Hohokam city, called "Casa Buena" by archaeologists, was also in the area (Section 34 with a few dwellings in Section 33), but cities, fields, and canals had all been abandoned by the Indians long before Europeans even appeared in the Southwest.

Seasonally, and in time of prolonged drought, the entire Salt River Valley suffered from an inadequate water supply, and the idea of building a water storage system on the upper Salt River had much support from Phoenix leaders and businesspeople. In 1903, proponents of stable water storage, including Benjamin A. Fowler, Patrick Hurley, E.J. Bennitt [sic], Dwight B. Heard, and others, were able to induce the federal government to enter the Valley as the primary developer of the Theodore Roosevelt Dam on the Salt River. The prosperity and future growth of both Phoenix and the Valley was thus insured. Development of Coronado Neighborhood, along with other outlying residential sections, was an inevitable result of the subdivision boom that began when land owners, speculators, and promoters began capitalizing on the appreciation of land values, as both city lots and agricultural properties increased at least twenty percent, and population burgeoned-- from the 1900 census of 5554, it went to 11,134 in 1910, to 29,053 in 1920, and 47,967 in 1930.

Phoenix City Engineer, Omar A. Turney, had difficulty keeping the city map updated after the guarantee of Roosevelt Dam. He revised it five times in the half decade between 1905 and 1910; prior to that, an 1895 map had been used for ten years. Between 1906 and 1908, thirty subdivision plats were filed with the Maricopa County Recorder's office, and four of those were in the Coronado district. By 1911, those four: Monte Vista (1903), Syndicate Place (1907), Homewood Tract (1908), and Ranchitos Bonitos (1908) were already undergoing changes. The Monte Vista Subdivision lay primarily in Section 34 and outside the Coronado historic district so is not considered here, but the development of the other three is shown as follows:

Syndicate Place (1907, H.J. McClung, Trustee) eighty-acre tract (S 1/2 NW 1/4 Sec. 33) bordered by 7th Street, Virginia, 12th Street, and the South Branch Canal [Oak Street]. Other subdivisions were Rydberg Place (1911), Arda Place (1913), Fowler Place (1921), Lot 10 (1921) Bevan Place (1926), Lea's (1929), and Keeran Place (1942);

Homewood Tract (1908, Suburban Realty--Dwight Heard, J.A. R. Irvine, Cornelius Hurley, E.J. Bennitt, J.C. Phillips) one hundred sixty acres (SW 1/4 Sec. 33) bordered by 7th Street, McDowell Road, 12th Street, and the South Branch Canal [Oak Street]. Other subdivisions from this tract were Los Olivos Heights (March 1912), Princeton Heights (September 1912), Phoencia (1913), Hurley Heights (1914), Frances Heights Amended (1915), Lot 6 (1924), Palm Gardens (February 1926), Lot 5 (July 1926), Homewood Park (February 1928), Homeview (April 1928), South Princeton Heights (May 1928), a portion of Lots 15-16 (August 1928), Fox Place (1929), and Wasson Place (1929);

Ranchitos Bonitos (1908, James Realty Company) one hundred sixty acres (SE 1/4 Sec. 33) bordered by 12th Street, McDowell Road, 16th Street, and the South Branch Canal [Oak Street]. A portion of Ranchitos Bonitos was itself originally part of Dwight Heard's Monte Vista Subdivision. Later subdivisions were Hubbell (1926), Coronado Park (1928), Roycroft (1928), Jackson Place (1930), La Colonia (1931), Ranchos Bonitos (1938), Governor Square (1938), Womack Heights (1939), McDowell Park (1940), Valle del Sol (1941), East Palm Lane (1943), and May Place (1945).

From the early 1890s, development of new neighborhoods had been fostered by the extension of streetcar lines linking residential areas with the commercial center of Phoenix. From the time the streetcar system was electrified in 1893, the Phoenix Railway Company had accepted subsidies from land developers in exchange for extending the streetcar lines to their tracts, a symbiotic relationship that was common throughout the United States. The first residents of the Coronado area had available to them the Brill Streetcar Line which had been constructed in 1895 as a single track from the downtown area through the new Dennis and Brill additions to Tenth Street and Brill, just south of East McDowell Road, the present location of the Good Samaritan Hospital complex. In 1914, a switch was added at Ninth on Pierce Street allowing for two-car operation, and at that time, the streetcar track was extended further north from Brill up Tenth Street, through the center of the Homewood and Syndicate Place subdivisions, terminating at Sheridan where a small commercial node eventually developed. The New Deal Grocery at 1005 E. Sheridan is the surviving structure there. The carline extension required a crossing over the South Branch of the Maricopa Canal, and a small trestle-type bridge was constructed. However, the anticipated building boom along that extended route did not materialize, so for a time, streetcar service terminated at Homewood Road, now Palm Lane.

In the decade of the twenties, many new homes were being built on streets like Coronado, Palm Lane, Dayton, Mitchell, from Seventh to Twelfth Streets, and then the Brill Line operated regularly with four cars on twelve-minute and fifteen-minute schedules. The overall heyday of the Phoenix railway system (1927, 1928, 1929) coincided with the peak building period in the Coronado Neighborhood. For many years, both before and after the popular advent of the automobile, neighborhood residents used the streetcars for transportation to work, to Sunday church services, and to the downtown commercial area for shopping or movie-going. Even the family of Governor George W.P. Hunt who lived on East McDowell between Sixteenth and Eighteenth streets used the street railway system. The governor had a chauffeured government auto, but it was used strictly "for state business."

The rural character of Coronado Neighborhood continued into the early 1930s, especially on the east side of the district. Large cottonwoods, and other native trees, lined the banks of Maricopa Canal, the South Branch, and their laterals. The area was a part of District Six of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association and was represented in water matters from 1914 to 1925 by E.J. Bennitt [sic] who had been one of the developers of the large Homewood Tract. As the original and primary route from Phoenix east and north to Fort McDowell and the Indian reservation, East McDowell Road, for many years, had been a narrow ribbon of pavement, but most streets in the neighborhood were still dirt or graveled. Residents still raised their own milch cow or goat, turkeys, chickens, and other farm animals, a practice which continued through the Depression Period. As farming was abandoned and homesteads carved into parcels, old farmhouses and outbuildings were often kept and utilized. An example is the existing structure at 2201 North Eleventh Street where a dairy farm operated as late as 1926. In the late 1920s when the farmhouse had been converted to a maternity home, the dairy milkroom with its concrete floors, sinks, and huge wall refrigerator was still attached to the house.

The cost of a residence in the neighborhood varied. In the Fowler Tract (bordered by 7th Street, Sheridan, 12th Street, and Virginia) individual lots sold for $375 to $650, and came provided with city water, sewer connections, electricity, and graveled streets. In other areas, a house and lot cost from $1900 to $2700. Generally, Coronado, a working class neighborhood, was affordable for young families, but there were some deed restrictions for construction. For example, $4500 was the minimum priced house that could be built in Hurley Heights, a tract of land bordered by: 7th Street, Homewood Road [Palm Lane], 10th Street, and McDowell Road, which was adjacent to Dwight B. Heard's prestigious and wealthy Los Olivos development west of Seventh Street. In Los Olivos it was necessary to erect a house that cost a minimum of $6500, plus there were barriers to residency for certain ethnic groups, a condition also specified for Hurley Heights. The Hurley Heights restrictions do not seem unusual when it is remembered that the original developers of Hurley Heights were some of the most prominent Phoenix families: the Heards, Bennitts, Irvines, Phillips, and Hurleys. When Hurley Heights became the first section of Coronado to be annexed to the city in 1919, it was taken in as a portion of the Los Olivos Addition. (The rest of Homewood Tract was annexed in 1925, along with most of the subdivisions that came out of Syndicate Place; the remainder of the Coronado historic district did not become a part of the city until 1938.) Hurley Heights took its name from Cornelius C. Hurley who had a cattle ranch there in the early 1900s. The Hurley family had been in Phoenix since the early 1880s, engaged in the cattle business and in meat processing. Their Phoenix Meat Company was a forerunner of the present day Tovrea Packing Company. Cornelius Hurley's large adobe home was located at about 743 East McDowell Road with the actual site being in the alley between McDowell and Coronado Road. Leading north from the homestead was a pathway or street which was called Hurley Way, a name that continued after development of the area as a residential suburb. In the 1920s, this "Hurley Way" became a twelve-foot wide pathway, enhanced by a concrete sidewalk, and was used as a shortcut from McDowell to Emerson Elementary School which was built on several acres at the northwest corner of the Hurley Heights Addition.

By the end of the twenties, there were several hundred single-family homes in the neighborhood, perhaps sixty percent or more of them being owner occupied. In some cases of rental property, one landlord might own a number of houses as in the case of rancher T.J. Shearin who had a dozen or more buildings on possibly seven different streets. Contractors sometimes purchased entire blocks and built several "spec" houses at a time. Some individuals bought empty lots and built their own homes, or even moved a house in from another location. In many cases, a local carpenter or contractor, such as John McTaggart, William Schute, or Howard Grimm, would be hired who would construct one house, or several, from his own design or one that had been selected from a pattern book and adjusted to fit the needs of the family. Howard Grimm, for example, built several homes in the neighborhood and was known for his distinctive use of two colors of brick. He utilized a lighter-colored brick for the main portion and a darker brick at the corners. (See photo)

Emerson School was constructed in 1921 in response to an influx of young families with children. The Neoclassical Revival style was nationally applied to schools and public buildings in the early twentieth century, hence the architectural design of Emerson School corresponds with that prevailing trend. The symbolism inherent in the Neoclassical Revival style was particularly appropriate in Arizona as the territory had only recently achieved statehood, and was eager to associate with national identity. In this regard, all of the public schools in Phoenix constructed in that period are of similar Neoclassical Revival design, a fact which reinforces the intended architectural image.

Today, Emerson School survives as a cornerstone to the western boundary of the historic district.

Coronado Park was purchased by the city on February 6, 1935, from the James Realty Company for $12,050. In 1936, $50,000 of municipal funds and WPA were utilized to construct a swimming pool, a lighted ballpark, and athletic fields. Phoenix had relied on donations of land for public parks until the advent of the federal funding programs. This was one of the first parks to be developed with "New Deal" monies. The park was probably created in response to the needs of the rapidly developing area just west, which had seen a population increase of several thousand in ten years.

Occupations represented in Coronado Neighborhood were similar to those in other middle class Phoenix districts. There were persons who were well-known locally and regionally, either at the time they lived in the community or later but probably half of the residents were blue collar workers. The south boundary of the district, East McDowell Road, was the location of homes for three of Arizona's statehood governors: George W.P. Hunt, 1733 E. McDowell; John C. Phillips, 1134 E. McDowell; and Rawghlie C. Stanford, 1314 E. McDowell. The neighborhood had a good number of government employees, professionals, persons involved in management, and small business owners. The following figures compiled from Phoenix City directories (1920-1935) reveal the middle class diversity of the neighborhood:

Total occupations selected at random:	2082
Trades, services	1016
Sales	413
Professional	163
Small business, managers, realtors	159
Government employees (federal 49, state 24, county 24, city 60)	157
Transportation	53
Owners or presidents of large companies and elected officials	44
Farmers, ranchers	30
Religious	4
Other	43

Some families, of course, left the neighborhood as their socioeconomic status increased, but residency of seven or more years was common, and a surprisingly large number of homeowners stayed twenty, thirty, forty, and even fifty years. There are many second generation property owners who lived as children in houses they later inherited from their parents and occupied themselves in their adult lives.

Development slowed in the years of the Great Depression. Many homeowners were forced to sell, others converted garages to small homes for themselves while they rented the main house. Still others moved to cheaper rental housing on a nearby street while they, too, rented out their own homes. City directories and oral interviews of neighborhood residents have indicated that this situation was a positive economic strategy, for the owner was able to eventually move back into the main house, still retaining the rear unit as a rental. The use of rental units and guest houses on the backs of lots continues today and is reflected in the current zoning which was first instituted by the city in 1930 with the adoption of an official zoning map.

By the end of the 1930s, the neighborhood, along with Phoenix and the rest of the Valley, was recovering well from the Depression and was ready to move into the more prosperous World War II and postwar periods. Housing construction in the neighborhood resumed, additional schools were built in the greater Coronado district (Whittier and North High), and the rural atmosphere declined drastically as the Maricopa Canal and the South Branch along with their network of ditches were abandoned and filled in. Due to increasing use of automobiles, streetcars became obsolete and the system no longer showed a profit. In 1936, the City of Phoenix had purchased a number of transit-type busses to supplement the streetcars, and in 1941, began using some of them on weekends on the Brill Line. On April 28, 1946, Brill Line veteran motorman, Fletcher Hale, operated the final streetcar through the neighborhood, and the subsequent use of city busses signaled, in Coronado, as in the rest of Phoenix, the end of an era and the beginning of a new one.

In 1917, land had been purchased near McDowell Road and Tenth Street for expanded hospital facilities for one of Phoenix's first medical institutions, the Arizona Deaconness' Home and Hospital, but it was not until 1923 that the 140-bed building was dedicated there as Good Samaritan Hospital. The hospital and other medical and commercial establishments, expanded on both sides of McDowell Road from Seventh Street eastward. Other major streets such as Seventh Street (originally Cave Creek Road) and Sixteenth (Park Road) became two and three-lane arterials bearing heavy city traffic as the Park Central commercial district, seven blocks to the west on North Central Avenue, began to take on importance as a "second downtown." Commercial interests also made inroads on primary roads within the neighborhood, such as Tenth, Sheridan, and Oak, and on the entire periphery of Coronado, businesses replaced homes. Many of the earliest buildings were razed for new construction, including Governor Hunt's home and the Hurley ranch house, and others were adapted for various uses. But for all the fast pace of life flowing around the boundaries, the residential core of Coronado neighborhood, especially in the proposed historic district, shows little change to the homes.

ARCHITECTURAL CONTEXT AND SIGNIFICANCE

The Coronado Neighborhood is significant as a cohesive neighborhood of early twentieth century residential architecture which clearly evidences its primary development period. The neighborhood flourished between 1910 and 1935 when modest Bungalow and Craftsman Bungalow designs were nationally prominent for middle class housing. Various Revival styles such as Spanish Colonial and Period Revival also found in the Coronado neighborhood were equally common during this period. All of these styles, especially the various designs of the Bungalow, were widely popular with the middle class population and appeared in the growing suburbs because they were economical and easily constructed. The Coronado Neighborhood Historic District is an illustration of the inter-relationship between architectural style and suburban house type of the middle class population during the early decades of the twentieth century.

The Bungalow and related Craftsman styles emerged in southern California at the turn of the century. Originating largely from the designs of Charles and Henry Greene of Pasadena and from the growing interest in the English Arts and Crafts movement, the Bungalow developed a mass appeal in California and rapidly spread across the country. This popularity was in part sparked by suburban developers who promoted the Bungalow as an economical and affordable house for the common man. This idea took hold, and by the 1920's, Bungalow designs were being promoted in national magazines and architectural publications.

It is from this context that the Coronado neighborhood emerged. Its collection of 1910's and 1920's vernacular residential architecture is indicative of the national trends influencing similar neighborhoods at the time. The strong correlation between historic development patterns with house type and architectural style in the Coronado neighborhood establishes the significance of the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District as an architectural entity.

Architectural Context

The Coronado Neighborhood Historic District is a diverse middle class residential neighborhood dating from 1907 to 1942 and possessing a high degree of integrity. It is significant architecturally as a collection of diverse styles which share a common period of construction, craftsmanship, scale, materials, setback, and feeling.

Coronado is significant as an example of Phoenix's early subdivision growth utilizing wide streets in a grid pattern. The typical blocks are fairly small and are bisected by narrow alleyways. The lots are well landscaped, although no consistent pattern is used.

Coronado can be further described as a neighborhood which was promoted as a streetcar suburb and later became dependent on the automobile, since it was located a significant distance from the main commercial hub of Phoenix. This characteristic is evidenced by the predominance of porte-cocheres and detached garages in the neighborhood.

Finally, the Coronado Historic District is significant as an example of early suburbanization and development of Phoenix in the first half of the 20th century. By 1935, Phoenix was Arizona's largest city, and from an agrarian beginning, Coronado had become one of its largest residential sections.

As the 1930s progressed and the immediacy of the housing shortage was addressed, the need for some long-term federal housing policy grew increasingly important. By the end of the 1930s, the neighborhood, along with Phoenix, was recovering from the Depression and was ready to move into the more prosperous World War II and post-war periods. The New Deal years of the Roosevelt Administration marked the beginning of the federal government's participation in the provision and improvement of housing. The National Housing Act of 1934 resulted in a surge in the housing market which characterized the economic recovery of the last half of the 1930s. The Act created the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) which was designed to stimulate new construction through increased mortgage lending by private institutions. To accomplish this, the FHA insured private lenders against loss on new mortgage loans, thus making lending relatively risk free. In return, the FHA required that housing built with insured loans meet certain design and construction standards, and that the borrower be allowed to repay the loan over a long period with fixed, affordable monthly payments.Additionally, in an attempt to protect long-term real estate values, the FHA promoted the concept of streetscapes with a uniform appearance and a sense of design continuity. The FHA program was widely successful and spurned residential construction between 1935 and 1942.

The influence of the FHA program on the depression-era growth of the housing industry in Phoenix is well illustrated by the historic resources of the Coronado Historic District. The development pattern in Phoenix from 1935 to 1942 reflected the nationwide movement toward mass housing developments and continuity in planning and design of subdivisions. The Coronado Historic District also reflects the FHA's ideas of simplicity, uniformity and cohesiveness of residential subdivision design. Continuity of the subdivision streetscape is evident. The residences also exemplify the FHA-promoted ideas of simplicity and uniformity in design, including incorporation of automobile storage as a function of housing design.

As a diverse middle class neighborhood, the residences are unpretentious and solid and reflect an all-American interest in current styles popular elsewhere in the country. The movement away from the heavily romanticized Period Revival styles of the 1920s to more simplified, uniform architecture began during the New Deal years. Houses constructed during the late 1930s and early 1940s conformed largely to a few standardized house forms manipulated slightly in roof, window and door treatment to convey some period image. This somewhat dramatic shift in domestic architectural design can be attributed to the programs of the FHA. The minimum materials and construction standards required by the FHA for insured mortgages for new construction played an important role in how houses were designed and built. In addition, the FHA openly supported more uniformity in style for new subdivisions in order to enhance future property values. Local builders and developers also saw the advantages to simple choices in the range of house plans and styles as a means to more economically build large scale housing projects. By 1942, the new moderate-size house in Phoenix was being undertaken with a limited palate of materials, house plans and stylistic choices.

While the builders still referred to the house designs by some name recalling a period style, they also stressed that the homes were of "modern design." The evolution of residential styles to the modern architecture of the post-war boom years has its roots in the housing built during the late Depression. A commonly used stylistic reference for house designs, built locally between 1935 and 1942, was the "French Provincial Style." The range of styles representing some period image is broadly referred to as the Minimal Traditional style.

Houses designed in what was termed the "French Provincial Style" were based loosely on the French eclectic house designs of the 1920s. The house form as well as the detailing of this style were much more subtle and reserved than its more picturesque predecessor. French Provincial examples were almost always covered with hipped roofs. The eaves were commonly detailed with cornice molding at the roof-wall junction and had little, of any, overhang. Most examples were asymmetrical in form with interlocking hipped roofs giving the appearance of a rambling farmhouse. Doorways were often offset, facing at right angles to the street Porches used in the French Provincial Style were limited to overhangs or canopies, or were small attached roofs near the intersection of the house's two main wings. More formal variations of the style presented a symmetrical, or nearly so, facade to the street with a central entrance. Elaboration of details recalling the European traditions included raised panel doors, some type of architrave and door surround such as fluted pilasters. Some designs included broken pediments above the door. Most designs included false shutters, usually louvered. Large chimneys were common elements used to provide added character to the house.

These French Provincial style, FHA-financed residences are found throughout the Coronado Historic District. The properties are consistent with the continued evolution of the district as a diverse middle class neighborhood, as indicated by the cohesiveness of the streetscape, craftsmanship, scale, materials and visual integrity. The strong correlation between historic development patterns with house type and architectural style in the Coronado neighborhood establishes the significance of the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District as an architectural entity.

The SHPO staff requests the Keeper to add the properties listed above to the "contributor" list in the nomination, and extend the boundaries of the district as demonstrated, as the evidence has shown that these properties do contribute to the middle class character of the Coronado neighborhood.

Coronado Neighborhood Historic District (Additional Documentation)
Maricopa County, AZ

Approved 1/29/92.

The documentation provides suitable justification for expanding the period of significance for the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District from 1907-1935 to 1907-1942. The expanded period reflects the significant influence of federal planning and housing construction policies during the late 1930s and the early 1940s, most notably the efforts of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA). The modest residences built within this period reflect the success of these programs in spurring residential construction of a particular form in the Phoenix area between 1935 and 1942. The areas of significance, NR criterion, and historic functions remain the same. The change in the period of significance results in the recategorization of several residential properties listed in the original district nomination. The additional documentation provides suitable justification for changing 94 resources from noncontributing to contributing status.

This property referenced above was listed as a noncontributor to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

This house was listed as a noncontributor in the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment because of a mistake in the original survey. The house was identified in the 1984 survey as a brick building with non-historic stucco. Recent close inspection by the staff of the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office has revealed that the house is actually of wood frame construction and that the exterior stucco is original. This house should now be considered historically and architecturally significant as defined by the contexts of the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment.

The Arizona SHPO staff requests the Keeper to add the property listed above to the "contributor" list in the nomination, as it is in fact a contributor to the historic fabric of the Coronado Neighborhood.

ADDRESS	SURVEY SITE NO.

This property referenced above was listed as a noncontributor to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

This house was listed as a noncontributor in the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment because of a mistake in the original survey. The house was identified in the 1984 survey as having window and wall sheathing alterations. Recent close inspection by the staff of the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office has revealed that the house, while having non-historic aluminum frame window replacement, has not had exterior wall sheathing alteration. Despite the altered windows, the house falls within the range of allowable integrity as defined in the 1992 amendment. This house should now be considered historically and architecturally significant as defined by the contexts of the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment.

The Arizona SHPO staff requests the Keeper to add the property listed above to the "contributor" list in the nomination, as it is in fact a contributor to the historic fabric of the Coronado Neighborhood.

These properties referenced above are listed as noncontributors to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

These houses were listed as noncontributors in the 1986 nomination because they were not fifty years old at that time and did not fall into the defined period of significance. Both houses were left out of the 1992 amendment inadvertently. The survey information indicates that the house at 1822 N. Mitchell has had no notable alterations since its construction. The house at 1342 E. Granada appears to have been stuccoed, but this has not so greatly altered the general integrity of the property to disqualify it as a contributor. Both houses fall within the period of significance as defined in the 1992 amendment. These houses should now be considered historically and architecturally significant as defined by the contexts of the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment.

This property referenced above was listed as a noncontributor to the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

This house was listed as a noncontributor in the 1986 nomination and the 1992 amendment because of a mistake in the original survey. The construction date for the house was given as ca. 1943-44. Research in the Phoenix City Directories for 1941 and 1942 indicates that the property was actually constructed in 1941. The error occurred because the original address for the property was 1128 E. Monte Vista.

The Arizona SHPO staff requests the Keeper to add the property listed above to the "contributor" list in the nomination, as it is now understood to fall within the historic context as described in the 1992 amendment.

ADDRESS: 1233 E. Monte Vista

It has recently come to the attention of the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office that the above-referenced property was inadvertently left off both contributor and non-contributor lists for the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona. The address was missed in the original nomination in 1986 and in the amendment in 1992. The property is shown to be a contributor on the map of the district, but is not officially listed in the contributor list attached to the nomination.

The house is a contributor to the district in terms of historic and architectural significance as defined by the contexts of the 1986 nomination and 1992 amendment. It maintains a high degree of integrity as well.

The Arizona SHPO requests the Keeper to add the above-referenced property to the contributor list in the nomination as it is a contributor to the historic fabric of Coronado Neighborhood Historic District.

The residence at 2237 North Mitchell Street was listed as a non-contributor at the time of the district's original 1984 survey, due to the replacement of several windows on the street façade. Since this time, the owner of the residence has petitioned the State Historic Preservation Office for reconsideration of the building's contributory status. As current Arizona SHPO policy allows for replacement of windows as an acceptable modification to contributors of National Register historic districts, and as no other modifications have been made to this building, it is the opinion of this office that this residence should be reclassified as a contributor the Coronado Historic District. This residence was constructed in 1931, within the period of significance for the National Register District.

The residence at 2217 North Dayton Street was originally listed as a contributor to the district. However, the State Historic Preservation Office has recently received documentation indicating that substantial modifications have been made to this building that have severely impacted the building's integrity and make it virtually unrecognizable as a residence constructed sometime in the early 1920s. Consequently, the State Historic Preservation Office recommends that it be reclassified as a non-contributor to the district.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Officer requests that the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places reclassify the property at 2237 North Mitchell to reflect its contributing status and reclassify the property at 2217 North Dayton Street to reflect its non-contributing status.

Correction to the Coronado Historic District, listed on the National Register of Historic Places on August 1, 1984.

The 1984 survey listed the house at 2535 N. Dayton as a non-contributor due to a second story addition to the house. It has subsequently been determined that the rear second story is not an addition but a second floor sleeper porch. The rear second story is a part of the original house and therefore the house is a contributor.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Office requests the Keeper of the National Register to change the status of this house from a non-contributor to a contributor to the Coronado Historic District.

Correction to the Coronado Historic District listed on the National Register of Historic Places on February 13, 1986 and amended on January 29, 1992.

CONTRIBUTING PROPERTY

ADDRESS: 1330 East Granada Road

This property is referenced as a non-contributor in the 1992 amendment to the Coronado Historic district, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

INTEGRITY

In the 1992 Coronado Historic District amendment the residence at 1330 East Granada Road was listed as within the revised Coronado Historic District boundaries. However, the property was deemed a non-contributor because the integrity of the building (roof) appeared to be affected.

Recently the owner of the property petitioned the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) for reconsideration of the building's contributory status. The SHPO architect has conducted a site visit and determined that the roof, while somewhat unusual, appears to be original to the 1942 construction.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Officer requests that the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places reclassify the property at 1330 East Granada Road to reflect its contributing status to the Coronado Historic District, as it does, in fact, contribute to the historic fabric of the District.

Correction to the Coronado Historic District listed on the National Register of Historic Places on February 13, 1986 and amended on January 29, 1992.

CONTRIBUTING PROPERTY

ADDRESS: 2232 North Edgemere Street

This property is not referenced as a contributor or a non-contributor in the 1986 Coronado Historic District nomination or the 1992 amendment to the Coronado Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona.

INTEGRITY

In the 1986 Coronado Historic District nomination and the 1992 amendment the residence at 2232 North Edgemere Street was not listed as a contributor or a non-contributor because the age of the building was not within the period of significance. However, it is within the boundaries of the Coronado Historic District.

Recently the owner of the property petitioned the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) for reconsideration of the building's contributory status. Documentation has been provided that shows the house was constructed in 1942.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Officer requests that the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places reclassify the property at 2232 North Edgemere Street to reflect its contributing status to the Coronado Historic District, as it does, in fact, contribute to the historic fabric of the District.

INTEGRITY

In the 1992 Coronado Historic District amendment the residence at 1330 East Granada Road was listed as within the revised Coronado Historic District boundaries. However, the property was deemed a non-contributor because of house stucco and change in windows.

The Coronado Neighborhood Historic District was listed in the National Register of Historic Places on February 13, 1986 and amended with a boundary expansion and expanded period of significance on January 29, 1992.

This amendment reclassifies one property from noncontributing to contributing. In addition, four new noncontributors are identified. These new noncontributors were identified as vacant sites in the 1986 National Register documentation, but now have building constructed after the district's period of significance.

The house at 1838 N. 12th St. is currently classified as a noncontributor because the initial survey leading to creation of the district estimated it to have been built after the period of significance. New information provided by the City of Phoenix Historic Preservation Office indicates the property was constructed in 1939, which is within the period of significance.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Office requests the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places to accept this property as a contributor to the district.

Dear Ms. Schober,

My thanks to you and your committee for recommending that the Coronado Neighborhood be considered for inclusion in the National Register as an historic district.

As a home owner and resident of the Neighborhood for eight years, I feel that this designation can only add to the growing pride and residential redevelopment of this unique area. With so much growth in the Valley of the Sun, I feel it is imperative to cite and preserve these special areas, increasing public awareness of the special history and architecture present in the Coronado District.

Both my husband and I have hopes that Coronado will be recognized as a National Historic District. Your committee's efforts in this regard are most appreciated by many, many of us in the Neighborhood!

Sincerely,

Mary M. Graf

Re: Coronado Historic District (Maricopa County)

Dear Ms. Shull:

The property referenced on the attached continuation sheet was originally listed in the Coronado Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona, as a noncontributor. The district was listed on the National Register of Historic Places on February 13, 1986. Upon the request of the owner, the SHPO staff has done extensive research into the background of the house. We have determined that it was constructed in 1930, has no exterior alterations, has excellent architectural integrity and contributes to the residential streetscape of the Coronado district.

I would appreciate your incorporating this change in status in the nomination's documentation so that this home can be recognized as a contributing property. Thank-you for your attention to this matter. If you have any questions do not hesitate to contact our historian, Jay C. Ziemann.

Re: Coronado Historic District, Phoenix, Maricopa County

Dear Ms. Shull:

At the request of several homeowners in the Coronado Historic District (listed on the National Register on February 13, 1986), an extensive new survey and research has been conducted.

We have determined that several of these properties, originally listed as non-contributors, are now of appropriate age, have excellent architectural integrity, and contribute to the residential streetscape of the district. Properties that were previously surveyed and mistakenly determined to be non-contributors because of rear additions, or screened porches, have now been re-evaluated as contributors.

In addition, the survey has determined that properties which were previously outside but adjacent to the existing boundaries, and which now meet the criteria listed above, should be included in the district by extending the boundary.

The SHPO staff would appreciate your incorporating these changes in the nomination, and requests that these properties be added to the contributor list in the Coronado Historic District nomination, and that the boundaries be extended, as the evidence has shown that these properties do contribute to the middle class character of the district.

Thank you for your attention in this matter. If have you have questions regarding this additional documentation, please feel free to contact our historian, Jay C. Ziemann.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Shull:

We have received information indicating that the above two properties were inadvertently shown as non-contributors when the district was nominated and subsequently listed in 1992. To correct that situation, we are enclosing the following:

Continuation sheets for each property with new information and explanation, and request for each a change in status to contributor.

Re: Coronado Neighborhood Historic District (correction)
House at 1233 E. Monte Vista
Phoenix, Maricopa County, Arizona

Dear Ms. Shull:

It has come to the attention of the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office that the above-referenced property was inadvertently left off both contributor and non-contributor lists in the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District 1986 nomination and 1992 amendment.

The house is shown to be a contributor on the map that accompanies the nomination and it does, in fact, contribute to the historic and architectural significance of the district as defined in the 1986 nomination and 1992 amendment. Therefore, the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office asks that the Keeper of the National Register add the house at 1233 E. Monte Vista to the Contributor list of the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District.

Please call me at (602) 542-7136 if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Hi Vivia,

We recently received (AD) for 2232 North Edgemere Street. Could you please tell me if the property is in the Coronado Neighborhood Historic District or the Boundary Increase? They are separate records (and files) and I need to know which one to update.

Thanks, Edson
