Section number 7 Page 1
Name of Property Grand Coulee Apartments
County and State Spokane County, WA

Built in 1910 at the western end of Spokane's Central Business District, the Hotel Upton was a typical Single Room Occupancy Hotel (SRO). Renamed the Grand Coulee Apartments, the physical appearance of the building has changed little since its construction.

The Grand Coulee is four stories with a full basement. Built of red brick with terra cotta details, the building is reinforced with steel columns and beams. The ground floor retains original commercial and retail display spaces, although portions of the north and east storefronts have been slightly altered and concealed with modern materials. Current efforts to rehabilitate the building have uncovered original prism glass transoms and canted entries. The original corner entry, modified during the historic period, now serves as a retail space. An arched entry flanked by Tuscan columns announces access to the upper floor apartment units on the east facade.

The appearance and function of the upper three stories have changed little over the years. The north and east elevations of the building, which front 1st and Cedar respectively, feature windows recessed between brick piers; five piers occur on the 1st Street facade, six on Cedar. Piers rest on terra cotta bases and are capped by composite capitals. Each bay contains double-hung sash for a total of six windows between each, two on each floor. Iron fire escapes with decorative railings occur on each street facade. Terra cotta lintels with projecting keystones head each window on both street facades. The building terminates in a pressed tin, classical cornice composed of strong moldings, modillions and dentils.

Originally there were 102 units, with most units consisting of a single room with a sink and a wardrobe. Only 15 of the 102 units contained a private bath. The other rooms relied on public baths which were located on each floor. Although the number of rooms with private baths has increased, most units still rely on the public facilities. The upper floors are arranged in a "W" configuration with three halls and two light wells which face the rear of the building and provide light to the inner rooms. The exterior windows on the upper floors are double hung wood sash. The original wainscotting, fir finished dark, remains intact in many places as do the hinged transom windows above hall doors. The main stairway rises from the main entrance directly to the second floor. Additional emergency stairways are located at the end of each hall in the rear of the building.

The building's present physical characteristics have not departed significantly from the 1910 design. The scale, plan and facade treatment are consistent with other SROs identified in the multiple property documentation form for SROs in Spokane's Central Business District.

The Grand Coulee Apartments meets registrations terms prescribed by the Multiple Property Documentation form for Single Room Occupancy Hotels. Eligible under criterion A for its association with an unprecedented period of growth in Spokane's history which occurred between 1900-1910, the hotel provided housing for the new class of itinerant workers who immigrated to Spokane to fill jobs in the area's rapidly expanding industries. Formerly named the Hotel Upton, the building also embodies architectural values of a property type which became widespread in Spokane's Central Business District (CBD) during the period of significance, 1910-1944. The building's design is also significant as the work of prominent Spokane architect, L.L. Rand, adding to its significance under criterion C.

The Hotel Upton was built during, and in response to, the greatest period of growth in Spokane's history. It was during this time that Spokane assumed its role as the hub of the outlying area, referred to as the Inland Empire or the Inland Northwest. Drawn by expanding industries such as mining, agriculture, lumber, and the railroads, itinerant workers flocked to Spokane to fill new jobs. Population nearly tripled as a result, and downtown Spokane experienced a building boom comparable to the one which followed the Great Fire of 1889. Buildings were constructed to meet the housing demand and the predominant type of lodging was the SRO. Indeed, as the first decade of the twentieth century drew to a close, and the growth began to subside, an SRO could be found on practically every block of Spokane's central business district. Built for a common purpose, these buildings display similar levels of physical features which make them recognizable in the present as characteristic of their era.

It was during this period of rapid growth that the Imperial Investment Company, headed by principal owner, manager and secretary Andrew Laidlaw, purchased lots 1 and 2, block 14 of Browne's Addition, at the corner of 1st Avenue and Cedar, in the western end of the CBD. Laidlaw was a respected mining and real estate investor with other real estate interests in the CBD. The lots were purchased in September of 1909 from James Cronin and Charles Theis for $38,000. The transaction was arranged by C.F. Clough and Company. It was a good deal; Cronin and Theis had purchased the property only 13 months earlier for $20,000. At that time, the lots contained a single story brick building tenanted by a blacksmith who paid $30 a month rent. However, Cedar street had recently been expanded across the railroad tracks to the south, allowing greater north-south travel, and Cronin and Theis were anticipating the construction of a new bridge across the river at the current Maple street site. These factors, coupled with the building boom Spokane was experiencing indicated that the property held great potential for improvement. At nearly double the return on their investment; however, Cronin and Theis were willing to let the Imperial Investment Company attempt to realize that potential. Laidlaw planned to build a four story building, covering the entire site, at a cost of $50,000. Work started in February of 1910. Less than five months later, in June of 1910, the Hotel Upton, a typical SRO stood four stories high on the site. It was built of brick, with stone and terra cotta finish. The Spokesman-Review, on May 22, 1910, noted that "in construction it is one of the most substantial of its kind in the city."

The Hotel Upton boasted 102 rooms on the top three floors with seven commercial and retail bays on the ground floor. In 1933, the name was changed to the Grand Coulee Hotel. At that time, the entrance was moved from Cedar to 1st, though it has subsequently returned to its original location. Over the years, the gas and electric lights were updated and other improvements have been made. An elevator has been installed. Overall, however, the Hotel Upton retains its historic integrity. It sheds light on the historic context in which it was built. Part of the historic significance of this building lies in its association with that time. The Hotel Upton was built in response to a period of growth unparalleled in Spokane's history. That this period made an important contribution to Spokane's historical development has already been demonstrated by Craig Holstine in the Multiple Property Documentation for SROs.

As an SRO, the Hotel Upton is significant not only in its association with important historical events, but also in that it embodies the distinctive characteristics of a certain type and period of construction. As previously mentioned, SROs became widespread in the CBD during the period of significance. These buildings shared a standard of both function and physical appearance apparent in the Hotel Upton. The ground floor of most SROs consisted of commercial and retail spaces filled with businesses catering to the itinerant workers who lived on the upper floors. The Hotel Upton was no exception; the seven commercial spaces housed hardware stores, grocery stores, coffee shops, and similar businesses.

The Hotel Upton is located at the western end of the CBD so that tenants were within walking distance of whatever services were not provided by the businesses on the two light wells which opened to the back of the building and provided natural light to the rooms in the interior. Most of the 102 units were single rooms with hot and cold running water and a wardrobe. Originally, only 15 units contained private baths. The rest of the rooms relied on public facilities located on each floor. Although the number of rooms with private baths has increased, they still do not make up the majority. The building was originally equipped with gas and electric lights and steam heat. Tenants had access to a telephone. The main stairway extended from the main entrance directly to the second floor. Additional emergency stairways were located at the end of each hall in the rear of the building. The wainscoting in the hallways was fir stained dark. Hinged transom windows above hall doors increased air circulation in the building. Many of these transom windows and much of the original wainscoting remain in place.

The Hotel Upton, like most SROs, offered short term housing for seasonal laborers or for those needing a place to stay until they could get established in town. SROs provided more privacy than a boarding house but were more affordable than upscale hotels or apartments. Like apartments, most SROs provided not only short term; but also permanent housing. Indeed, an advertisement in the Spokesman-Review from January 29, 1911 promised "special rates to permanent guests" of the Hotel Upton. From the description above, it is clear that the Hotel Upton was a typical SRO as defined in the Multiple Property Documentation form. The SROs represent a certain type and period of construction in Spokane's history. Part of the Hotel Upton's significance lies in the fact that it retains its historic integrity and thusly displays the distinct characteristics of an SRO.

Aside from its significance as an SRO, the building is associated with a major figure in Spokane's history, the architect L.L. Rand. Laidlaw chose L.L. Rand to design his building, and in doing so picked one of Spokane's premier architects. Educated at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Rand worked as an architect in Grand Rapids and Minneapolis, Michigan before moving to Spokane in 1888. From that time to 1910, Rand distinguished himself as one of Spokane's finest architects by designing the First Presbyterian Church, the Marble Band and the Riverside and Main additions to the Crescent building. Rand also designed between 12 to 15 of Spokane's public schools. The best known of these, Lewis and Clark High School, had the honor of President Theodore Roosevelt laying the cornerstone. Rand collaborated with J.K. Dow to create the Tidbal Block, the first four story building erected after the Great Fire of 1889. Rand and Dow also worked together on the Bennet Block and the Masonic Temple. Many of the buildings listed above have become Spokane landmarks, and several are already listed in the National Register. It is for these buildings that Rand is best known. However, it is interesting to note that Rand's work was not limited to high profile structures, as demonstrated by the Hotel Upton.

In summary, the Hotel Upton is significant primarily because it retains the historic integrity of an SRO. As such, it represents a distinctive property type which made an important contribution to Spokane's history and development. The building is also significant in its association with the architect L.L. Rand, whose work represents a major part of Spokane's architectural heritage.
