DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Lee Cabin is a frame and hewn-log structure which is in essentially the same condition as when it was occupied as a summer home by the "Lighthorse Harry" Lee family more than 150 years ago. The building is two stories high and has four rooms, two upstairs and two downstairs. The exterior is dominated by a cut-stone chimney which serves the structure with cooking and heating facilities.

The cabin is well lighted through the abundance of windows--twelve pane, double-hung--symmetrically placed. There is one to the front of each room, but the back is built into the side of a knoll and only has windows in the upstairs rooms. Following the contour of the ground, the foundation rises several feet toward the front, and a wide porch supported by log stilts is on that side. The structure is situated on a hillside to take advantage of a natural spring which opens under the house.

The interior walls, now painted white, are the smoothed and fitted sides of the building logs which also form the exterior. The upstairs bedrooms are exposed above the slanting roofline, and the rough timber rafters and plank roof boards form the ceiling.

Now owned by the State of West Virginia, the Lee Cabin has been preserved with minor restoration. It is presently used as a museum and contains furniture and other objects related to the period of its private use by the Lees.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The "Lighthorse Harry" Lee Cabin is significant because it was owned and built by Henry Lee, commonly referred to as "Lighthorse Harry" for his cavalry days of the American Revolution. Lee was also a politician who served in bodies which helped set the foundation for the new American nation. His cabin is somewhat typical of many early log structures--more sophisticated than frontier log houses--constructed as seasonal homes around the health springs of Virginia's back country. Almost incidentally, Henry was also the father of Robert E. Lee, who owned the property, along with three brothers, from the early nineteenth century until 1832.

This brilliant Revolutionary War cavalry commander is especially known for his operations against Paulus Hook and in covering the retreat of General Nathanael Greene across North Carolina to Virginia in 1781. He was also a member of the Articles of Confederation Congress from 1785 to 1788, Governor of Virginia, 1792-1795, commander of the troops which suppressed the famed Whisky Rebellion of 1794, Congressman from 1799 to 1801, and author of the well-known eulogy of Washington which praised our first president as "first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen."

In 1796, Lee received title to more than 60,000 acres of land in the old Northern Neck of Virginia, including that on which he built his cabin.

In 1800 Lee completed his frame and log cabin near a salt spring in the area called Howards Lick. Possibly with a view toward commercial development of his property, he "improved" the spring by lining it with marble slabs. For some years the Lee family continued to use the cabin as a summer retreat and hunting lodge, especially seeking the healing qualities of the spring when Henry's second wife, Anne Hill Carter, sought rest and renewal.

Henry Lee's propensity for bad business operations led to estrangement from other branches of his family. This may have caused him to seek refuge from his creditors by retreating to an isolated portion of Virginia. He had dealings with such well-known figures as Robert Morris of Philadelphia, General Benjamin Lincoln, and, at one time, had borrowed $27,000 in shortterm notes from George Washington.

Unable to satisfy all creditors, "Lighthorse Harry" voluntarily surrendered to the sheriff of Westmoreland County, Virginia, in 1809, and was committed to debtor's prison for about two years. The Lost River property on which the Lee Cabin was built was saved by the Lee family in their bankruptcy proceedings, for it had been transferred in joint ownership to four sons, including Robert E. Lee.
