Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Bailey House was built in 1837 using the Greek Revival style of architecture. It is a two-story weatherboard building resting on a brick-pier foundation infilled with lattice slats.

The front door has a multi-lighted transom, but no sidelights. The two windows to either side of this entrance are floor-length sash windows which are nine-over-nine in configuration. Above the front door on the second floor is a cantilevered balcony entered from a doorway duplicating the one below. The two windows which are on either side of this door were originally six-over-six in configuration. Some of these windows have been replaced with different configurations.

The house has a rear ell which boasts a porch with three two-story columns which are the same as those on the front porch. This area is an extension of the central-hall plan, the porch being a continuation of the hall, with one room to the north of the porch providing additional living space.

Based on the central-hall plan with a rear ell, this house originally had five rooms downstairs and five upstairs. The staircase up to the second floor is offset in the rear southern room so the hall is open to the back porch with no interruption.

Several alterations have been made in the house. Modernizations include the addition of a breakfast room/kitchen to the north of the rear ell prior to 1920. In 1950, the interior wall between the two northern rooms was removed, forming a double-parlor configuration. Bath and storage areas have been installed in the southern rear room on the first and second floors, and the rear porch has been screened in on the first floor. The front porch was widened at some time prior to 1936 and infilled with concrete. The columns now are set approximately two feet back from the porch edge. None of these changes have altered the original fabric of the house beyond recognition.

The house sets back from U.S. Highway 80 approximately 250 feet and still maintains the original axial approach. In 1944, the front lawn was reworked, and three terraces, divided by brick steps up at each level leading to the front door, were added. Several trees are located on the property, including dogwood, pecan, and redbud. Shrubbery around the house includes boxwood, azaleas, and holly. The only extant outbuilding is the garage. The site of a servants' house is marked on the 1948 plat. However, no further information exists on it. The site is no longer visible.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Frederick A. Bailey House is significant in architecture and local history. Architecturally, it is significant because it shows early concepts of the Greek Revival movement reaching the town of Talbotton as it emerged from the frontier. In local history, it is significant due to the role its numerous owners have played in the social and political affairs of Talbotton.

The Bailey house is architecturally significant for being one of the first efforts in this town to introduce the Greek Revival style of architecture. As the movement gained momentum around the nation during the 1830s, Talbotton was being carved out of the wilderness which had been opened for white settlement with the Land Lottery of 1827. Thus, within the first decade of settlement, a house of this style and detail was being erected. It incorporates primitive Doric columns, a very plain entrance with only a transom, and the extension of a central-hall plan with a columned porch on the rear. Later homes in the area are exact copies of Greek Revival patterning, showing close attention to the many pattern books available during the decades before the Civil War. This home reflects an early settler's more personal, less influenced attempt to construct a house in the prevailing Greek Revival mode under modest circumstances. Greek Revival style, which spanned the four decades from 1820-1860, by definition, implies a building pattern stimulated by the works of ancient Greeks as well as Romans. The style was considered by Talbot Hamlin to be original and not a real revival, since only its decorative details revived those of ancient Greece and Rome.

In local history, the Bailey house is significant to Talbotton since all of its owners have been active participants in the town's growth and development due to their roles as court officials, merchants, educators, editors and lawyers. Frederick A. Bailey, who is believed to have built the house in 1837, purchased the original fifty-acre portion of Land Lot 239 for $600 that year. This small acreage indicates he did not intend to rum a plantation from this house or to do much farming at all. He was clerk of the Superior Court (1834-39) when he accumulated seven town lots in Talbotton along with this house's original fifty acres before his mortgage holder forced a foreclosure and a sheriff's sale. The property went on the auction block September 4, 1839, on the courthouse steps, as was the custom, and the mortgage holder, Henry J. Bailey, became the owner of the seven town lots, this land and the house for a mere $115. Since Frederick owed Henry $3,500, Henry faired poorly in the transaction. Frederick was still in Talbotton in the 1840 Census, but later disappeared. Henry J.

Bailey owned the house from 1839-1843 and had moved to Coweta County when he sold it to Thomas A. Brown (1811-1878). Brown's wife was Frances B. Smartt. He was a merchant and editor. After only a few years' ownership, he sold the same fifty acres to Isham Brooks for $1,500 on January 4, 1847.

Brooks (1786-1852) had moved to the county from Eatonton earlier in the decade along with many members of his family. At his death, he was remembered as an educator, and it is believed that he was involved with one of the local academies, as the house's proximity to an academy was specifically mentioned in the sale notice. Brooks' heirs offered the house for sale, as prescribed by law, in December of 1853 and although the sale was postponed, the house and grounds were described: "50 acres of land, the place whereon Mrs. Lizzena Brooks now lives—well improved; a Dwelling with 5 rooms, good kitchen, smokehouse, fine water, convenient to the Female school in Talbotton and the Collinsworth Institute, situated between said town and Institution."

After unraveling some legal entanglements, Brooks' heirs sold the house to Joseph Pou (1798-1888), a local attorney who, like his predecessors, kept it only a few years. In 1859, he sold it to Judge Barnard Hill (1804-1877), another attorney. Hill's son, Walter (1851-1905), grew up here and later became chancellor of the University of Georgia (1899-1905).

After Judge Barnard Hill's death, his heirs sold it to Mrs. Frances B. Brown, widow of Thomas A. Brown, who had lived there in the 1840s. Her daughters sold it in 1883 to Mrs. O.D. Gorman, whose husband was county school superintendent and a newspaper editor. While there, Mr. Gorman wrote Handbook of Talbot County, Georgia (1888), a local promotional book prepared for the Georgia Bureau of Immigration. They, in turn, sold it to Edward K. Leonard, a member of a family in Talbotton who owned several of the historic homes at various times. It was during his ownership that it was surveyed by the Historic American Buildings Survey in 1936. Hence, its designation then as the Hill-Leonard House.

The present owner purchased the house in 1948. He is a well-known member of the community in his capacity of band director at the local high school.
