A black and white photograph of the Hotel Carlyle building facade, viewed from a low angle looking up. The building is a multi-story structure with a dark, possibly brick or stone, exterior. The top of the building features a decorative cornice with a row of small, repeating arched motifs. Below this, there are several rows of windows. A prominent sign is mounted on the facade, displaying the name "HOTEL CARLYLE" in large, bold, capital letters. The windows are arranged in a grid pattern, with some appearing to have multiple panes. The overall appearance is that of a classic, early 20th-century hotel building.
