Leadville's history as a mining camp is world known. The men and families which lived in Leadville made it such. The Dexter Cabin was built by one such man, James V. Dexter, in 1879. The style and taste of the Cabin reflect one facet of Leadville's "Elegant Eighties;" that of a wealthy mining magnate's way of life.

Chief significance of the Cabin lies in its interior decor. The style is mid-Victorian, a period which strove for the exotic and grandlose; for a multiplicity of texture, color and pattern.

That an early Leadville business man chose to express this mid-Victorian elegance within his hunting cabin while keeping the exterior of the log cabin severe, is itself an example of the complexity of the period's taste of decor.

The Cabin today is part of the State Historical Society of Colorado's regional museum system. Open to the public free of charge, the Cabin presents an example of Leadville's early development when mining contributed to a large part of Colorado's growth.
