Joseph W. Low is a rather shadowy figure in Bangor's history. He is first neferred to in the Bangor Directories of the 1840's as a gentleman and businessman which by the protocol of the day suggests he was quite wealthy. Low had his house erected on Thomas Hill in 1857. Joseph Low left Bangor shortly after the Civil War for San Francisco and his relatives still living there remember very little about him except that he was always referred to in family circles as a wealthy man.

The Low House stands on one of the most beautiful locations in Bangor. It was erected on the top of Thomas Hill an important part of Bangor's early urban planning. As originally intended, Thomas Hill would be a showplace development for the elite of Bangor in the 1840's and 1850's.

With most of the land of the Broadway area already taken up, lumber baron Rufus Dwinel, as one of Bangor's early mayors, instituted a tree planting project in the Thomas Hill area and encouraged the development of fine houses on the slopes of the hill. Dwinel's aesthetic values are well rewarded by the view from the top of Thomas Hill which spreads the City of Bangor out below and in front of the viewer; all the way down to the Penobscot River which winds like a snake through the Penobscot Valley. The entire view is framed by the trees that Dwinel caused to be planted in the 1840's.

The house itself is one of Bangor's and in fact Eastern Maine's outstanding Italianate residences. Executed in wood by the firm of Fogg and Benson, it remains one of the finest examples of architecture and urban planning in those halcyon Bangor days before the Civil War. The sophisticated placement and design of this house bespeak volumes of the varied talents available in an essentially frontier city.

Designed by Harvey Graves of Boston, who executed several designs for churches in Bangor; Mcluding the Universalist in the 1860's and the Free Will Baptist in 1856, it remains his finest Bangor work.

8. SIGNIFICANCE

The Low-McEvoy house is an essential and integral part of the architectural history and development of Bangor, Maine. It is the finest, purely Italianate structure in a city of outstanding residential buildings, eighty per cent of which are constructed of wood. Standing on Thomas Hill looking down over Bangor, one cannot escape the sensation of time being compressed and 1857 does not seem quite so long ago.
