8. Significance [South Carolina State Hospital Mills Building]

typical of his design that this and other of his buildings look their best in brilliant sunlight, each slight raised surface or detail thrown in high relief South Carolina's State Hospital building was among the first authorized, and the third completed, mental hospitals in American built with public funds. The original appropriation for building and grounds was $30,000 -- "to be erected of brick and stone, covered with slate or tile." The cornerstone laid in 1822 is no longer in evidence, and the assumption is that it was covered by the wing and additions. As finished and furnished, the building was reported "imposing in externals, very spacious and proof against fire -- it is large enough to accommodate 120 patients and the total cost approaches $100,000." At the time of construction, Mills was State Architect, 1820-1827. Mills' ingenuity and humanitarianism are shown in more than one feature of the In Architects of Charleston, Beatrice Ravenel quotes the Charleston Courier of February 21, 1824: "Not the smallest appearance of a prison is manifest in the building. Security is agreeably under appearances familiar to the eye in every private house. The iron bars take the similitude of sashes; the hinges and locks of the doors are all secret; so that every temptation is put out of the way to make an escape...."

Social/Humanitarian:

In the early nineteenth century, the concept of care for the mentally ill was far from humane. Many believed that the only solution was to "put away" these people in institutions similar to prisons. Robert Mills did not share this belief, and his State Hospital design reflects reforms that were far ahead of his day; i.e., the rooms were planned with a southern exposure to provide patients with fresh air and sunlight, and the avoidance of a prison appearance by hiding hinges and locks. The fireproofing of buildings was also a practice quite uncommon for the early nineteenth century and one in which Mills was a leader.

In 1852 and 1859, Dorothea Dix, national leader in improving conditions for the mentally ill, visited the South Carolina State Hospital, meeting with officials there to discuss innovative methods of care and treatment.

Science:

Dr. J. W. Babcock first recognized and treated pellagra while serving as superintendent of the State Hospital (1891-1914). As one of the pioneers in the United States in the study and treatment of this disease, Dr. Babcock helped translate and abridge a study on pellagra which was published in the United States in 1910.

In 1931, the United States Public Health Service established at the State Hospital a Division of Field Investigation of Malaria. This was the national center for dissemination of curative material in malarial therapy for paresis.
