The Eisenhower Home is a two-story white frame house with a hipped roof and a chimney in the center of the roof. It has a flat-roofed front porch on the south and a small side porch on the west. A one-story addition of two rooms was built on to the east when Dwight's grandfather, Jacob Eisenhower, came to live with the family.

Upstairs the house had two fairly large bedrooms and one quite small. The original downstairs consisted mainly of a parlor, dining room, and kitchen.

Today the exterior of the house looks much as it did when young Dwight Eisenhower was living there. Original family articles, furniture, and furnishings remain in the various rooms, including hooked rugs Dwight's father made as a hobby and homemade bed spreads and coverlets.

The Eisenhower Home has been open to the public since 1947.

Dwight David Eisenhower (1890-1969) moved with his family to this home in southeast Abilene when David Eisenhower (Dwight's father) bought it in 1898 from his brother, Abraham L. Eisenhower. Ike grew up in this house, living here until he left Abilene in 1911 to enter the United States Military Academy at West Point,

New York.

After his graduation from the academy in 1915, he served creditably at a number of posts and also continued his education, graduating first in a class of 275 students at the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1926.

His skill as a tactician in the army maneuvers in Louisiana in the fall of 1941 brought him to the attention of the Army Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall. A series of command assignments successfully executed gained him the post of Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force, in December, 1943, and the direction of the invasion of Europe.

In 1946 he was promoted to the rank of permanent General of the Army, which was made retroactive to December, 1944. President Truman appointed him Army Chief of Staff in November, 1945, a position which he held until February, 1948, when he retired from active duty to become president of Columbia University. From December, 1950, to February, 1951, he was on leave of absence to serve as Commander of Allied Powers in Europe and organize the armed forces of NATO.

He resigned from the army in July, 1952, to campaign for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. Successful in this effort, he handily won the 1952 election and won re-election in 1956 by an even greater margin. By his vote-getting powers Dwight Eisenhower proved himself one of the most popular political figures in American history.

Eisenhower Boyhood Home

After their metheris death in 1016, the Picenhover brothers deaded the femily home and

After their mother's death in 1946, the Eisenhower brothers deeded the family home and all adjoining grounds, consisting of about one city block, as well as all personal effects within the home, as an outright gift to The Eisenhower Foundation Organized to Promote Citizenship and to Honor Veterans of America's Wars, Inc. (The Foundation was chartered as a non-profit corporation by the State of Kansas on July 23, 1945, by eminent persons not only from Kansas but across the nation.)

The home is unique in that it was not necessary to restore or replace with replicas any of the original and historic items. The home was kept just as it was at the death of Mrs. Eisenhower. The simple pieces of furniture remain in the same places. Hooked rugs made by David Jacob Eisenhower are on the floors; homemade spreads and coverlets cover the beds; on the walls, in chest drawers, and on tables are souvenirs and mementos of the full lifetime of David Jacob and Ida Elizabeth Eisenhower with their boys. There is the room outside which Edgar stood with a club and refused to let anyone in when Ike was critically ill and doctors wanted to amputate his leg. There is the piano which Mrs. Eisenhower bought with her dowry money, and on which all the boys had to take lessons. There are the boys' books. There is the bedroom where both David and Ida Eisenhower died, with her cotton dustcap still hanging on the back of a wooden rocker.

One original outbuilding remains, this being the old garage made from the original barn, now used as an office.

The Boyhood Home occupies a lot described as 75×125 feet. However, it is now part of a park complex embracing $13\frac{1}{2}$ acres, which has been acquired by the Foundation. In addition to the original home and outbuilding, three other structures have been erected on the property: a modern museum, erected in 1954; pylons donated by the Kansas Society, D.A.R., honoring the Veterans of America's Wars and the Eisenhower family; and the Presidential Library, south of the Museum, which is one of the largest research centers in the Midwest. The Library has been presented to, and is now operated by, the National Archives and Records Service, General Services Administration, of the U. S. Government. The Library is intended primarily for the use of scholars, but the public may view the lobby and one display gallery.

The Museum building, like the Boyhood Home, is operated by the Eisenhower Foundation. This building offers a modernistic atmosphere throughout. The structure is of native stone quarried about 20 miles northeast of Abilene. Long before President Eisenhower entered the White House, he designated the Foundation in his home town as the recipient of a major portion of his vast collection of mementos, trophies, madels, souvenirs, and personal tokens of honor, valued at well over $3,000,000. Altogether there are over 15,000 items, including gifts and special displays from many states and foreign lands. The size of the collection has grown considerably since he became President—and is still growing. (continued on next page)

The exhibits in the Museum are arranged to bring into focus the intrinsic, historic, and educational values. Starting with his early boyhood at Abilene, the Museum displays trace the life of President Eisenhower through high school in Abilene; West Point; his military career; and on to the Presidency. Murals in the lobby also depict events in the life of Dwight D. Eisenhower. These were made possibly by the bequest of Mary Gertrude Abbey in honor of her husband, Edwin Austin Abbey, famous mural painter and illustrator who died in 1911. The bequest is administered by the National Academy of Design in New York City. Paintings illustrating events from the President's boyhood to the Presidency were done by Ross Moffett of Pravincetown, Massachusetts; two murals depicting his military career were done by Louis Bouche of New York.

Since June, 1947, the home has been open to the public daily, and more than 1,100,000 persons from all the states and territories and 114 foreign countries have registered as visitors. In 1956 the home was reconditioned to make a permanent and lasting memorial for future generations to enjoy.

The Eisenhower Home, Museum, and Library are open to the public daily, including Sundays and holidays, except for Christmas day, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. There is no charge for the Home, but a contribution box is provided to help pay the expense of maintaining it. The Library display areas and lobby are open to the public with no admission charge. The Museum has a charge of 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children 6 to 18 years of age.
