Description Summary:

Between April 1932 and October 1933, pairs of stone markers, designed by architect Edward Donn to identify important entrances into the District of Columbia from Maryland and Virginia, were erected at six different locations into the city. The pair of stone markers at Westmoreland Circle represents two of seven surviving markers (three pairs and one single marker). The surviving pairs of markers are located at Westmoreland Circle, at Wisconsin Avenue (at Western Avenue), and at Chevy Chase Circle. The single marker is located in the median at the center of Georgia Avenue at the District line at Kalmia Road and Alaska Avenue. All of the extant markers have signs of weathering, pollution and other abuse. Most, if not all, have been knocked over at some point by motorists, or removed entirely and re-erected in the same general, but not exact same locations. The missing markers were likely removed and discarded during road widenings and/or construction; however, nothing is known for sure of their fate.

General Description:

The markers are upright, rectangular-shaped, dolmen-like stones constructed of Aquia Creek sandstone. Although the stones originally rose approximately five feet in height, they are now of varying heights depending on whether and how many times they have been knocked over and broken by erratic motorists and re-erected on their broken bases. The markers feature fluted shafts with fluting on-center running vertically the full length of the shaft, and horizontally along the edges, forming a defined edge or border.

On the markers located at the Maryland-District line, the seal of Maryland (the shield of the Calvert Coat of Arms) is located on one side towards the upper part of the stone shaft, with "Maryland" incised in uppercase lettering below the seal. On the opposing side and also at the upper part of the shaft, is a cartouche carving representing the District of Columbia and the commemoration of George Washington. "District of Columbia" is incised in uppercase lettering below the cartouche. The District of Columbia cartouche features a bas-relief depicting George Washington standing upon a pedestal with Lady Justice on the ground next to the pedestal holding a laurel wreath at its front. George Washington is flanked in the background by the dome of the Capitol building and a rising sun. In the foreground, an eagle is perched upon a garland emanating from a central laurel wreath.

The Virginia markers (no longer extant) held a seal of Virginia on one side and the commemorative seal of the District of Columbia on the opposing side.

An inscribed dedication "Erected by the Garden Club of America 1932" was meant to appear on one of the undecorated sides at the lower part of the marker; however not all of the dedication panels survive. Similarly, a metal fence comprised of four metal bollards with chains linked between them, originally surrounded the markers. Today, only two of the markers retain these chain fences. Finally, the markers were originally set within planting schemes designed by the Maryland and Virginia Garden Clubs, respectively. Today, only the markers at Georgia Avenue and Chevy Chase Circle are set within (recently) planted beds.

Westmoreland Circle Markers:

The Westmoreland Circle markers are located on either side of the grassy circle, at the inside of its circumference and generally on-axis with Western Avenue (on the west side of Westmoreland Circle the extension of Western Avenue is actually the Dalecarlia Parkway). The western-most marker is located beneath an oak tree and is surrounded by its original chain fence. The western marker is in relatively good condition with both the District and Maryland cartouches legible, though both seals are quite weathered and worn down. The edges of the marker have suffered abuse, with major spalling in particular, apparent on the southwest edge of the marker, on its upper half.

The eastern-most marker, located in the open with no tree or chain fence for protection, is more susceptible to out-of-control motorists. The marker is not fully upright, but is slightly tilted, having been hit and re-erected on several occasions. The stone face has been sheared away from this marker at one of its lower corners (this corner is presently located towards the inside of the circle on the southeast side), though the Maryland seal remains in excellent condition and surprisingly unweathered.

Summary Statement of Significance:

The Garden Club of America markers are stone markers that were erected to mark important entrances to the District of Columbia from Maryland and Virginia in 1932 and 1933. Originally planned to be dedicated as part of the 1932 George Washington Bicentennial celebration, the markers were constructed both concurrently with the series of events celebrating the 200th anniversary of Washington's birth and following the celebration. The markers were designed by local Washington, D.C. architect Edward Donn for the Garden Club of America which sponsored their erection in collaboration with the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission and under the review of the Commission of Fine Arts. Of the original six pairs of markers identified as having been constructed, three pairs and a single marker survive in various degrees of preservation.

The markers are significant both as surviving objects associated with the important George Washington Bicentennial Celebration, a national celebration commemorating the contributions made by the "first true American," and as landscape objects marking the District-Maryland and District-Virginia line at notable entry points into the city. The ornamentation of the stone markers (i.e the depiction of George Washington) is emblematic of the efforts of the era to arouse nationalistic sympathies and, as such, provides an excellent artistic expression of the time.

The markers are significant under Criterion C and Criterion Consideration F with Art and Landscape Architecture as the Areas of Significance. The Period of Significance for the markers extends from 1932 to 1933, when the first and last of the markers are known to have been dedicated.

Resource History and Historic Context:

Westmoreland Circle Markers

The first pair of entry markers was erected on April 24, 1932 on the Virginia side of Key Bridge. Over a year later, in October 1933, another pair of entry markers was dedicated at Chevy Chase Circle, along with the Newlands Memorial Fountain. According to the Evening Star, the Chevy Chase markers were the "sixth to be placed by the Garden Club of America at important gateways to the city." The article notes that the other pairs of markers were placed at the 16th Street entrance, at Wisconsin Avenue, at Georgia and Alaska avenues, and on the Virginia side of "both the Highway and Key Bridges." The article states, "It is hoped that the Garden Club of America will similarly mark other entrances to the city as they are developed into impressive gateways.”¹ Little is known about exactly when the Westmoreland Circle markers were erected, and there is some speculation that the pair of markers erected on 16th Street were moved to Westmoreland Circle.² In any case, it is known that the Westmoreland Circle markers stood at the Circle by June 1935 when a Westmoreland Hills resident wrote to Charles Moore at the Commission of Fine Arts, stating,

“I notice the nice Boundary stones which have been put on the circle of Massachusetts Avenue Extended. I like them very much, but if you will notice some time, you will see, I think, that they have not been rightly oriented. The Maryland District Line neither goes through the plane of either their surfaces, or through the corners. I think when you or your representative sees them you will see that they need turning so as to mark the boundary properly.”³

A return letter from Moore to the concerned citizen explains that the Westmoreland Circle markers, like those at Chevy Chase Circle, were not meant to mark the actual boundary line, but were simply a notification that one was passing a boundary.

² This speculation is simply based on the fact that the 16th Street entry markers are mentioned in press reports, but are no longer extant, while the Westmoreland Circle markers are not mentioned in period newspaper accounts at all.
